Preface

The French Community Party (designeed throughout their pages by its autain PCF, which stand for Parts Communities Prançois) occupies a special, almost unaque position in France and in the world. It is, and has been for a long time, the main party of the French working class, it has often played a crucial role in the nation's late, as for example in the Popular Frant of the 1940s, the unti-Nati Roustines of the 1940s, and the events of May June 1968, at the time of writing it in the only wessers Communical party which is not in appointment, but is part of a left wing constitute government, dispets gravitable ups and downs, its electors) support in the post-way period has been consistently high, flamily, although its mainbardup is produced models strate and an ampressive marsher of untillectuals. For their remains, a critical study of its past and present utoms both timely and world.

The Indowing pages do not class to be a fully eccentric study of the PCF, methy business such a study can best by undertaken by a whole teem of echology rather then by a magic undividual, and partly because for two many documents are still not available to instantage ! What I have andreweared to provide it a general account of the most landmarks to the PC F's controversal history, must at far in possible from the music. By this last physical mann that in addition to recording the facts I have track to show how they were viewed by the participants themselves, leaders as well as unknown members, whenever prouble, This approach has not prevented our from making critical comments. which I offer as a executive for further discussion rather than as a delantive marmonal. In writing about a party which often doubleved documeter tendencies, enougally history the 1980s, a crystic should dolhimself be guilty of dogmetions, either favourable or homie. On the whole, it makes better to be pumple know what the PCP and and und, on that they could draw their own conclusions. Naturally I have not bean entirely questral, since it is approached to write an human affairs without taking unter. As a Margar, I am bound to feet a good deal of sympachy for the PCF, but I have triad to use my own araignation to get a better underwanding of French Community without centing to be extend of their buleviour

As for my nowces and references, the many one is of course the PCP's one documents and archives. The former include L'Homenste, the party's deely paper sance its foundation; the Calaire do Cammittanian manthly organ; other periodicals, such as the weekly Revolution, and the many bruchures, leaflets and the like put our by the party. With regard to the PCP's archives, many documents still remain confidential, but from the mad-1970s onwards, the term of PCP historians working at the [RM* have published a number of interesting documents, including assesses of meetings, debutes and so on, together with clear introductory notes. This valuable work is still going on, and or doubt, will continue to throw further light on accurts of the party's history.

A record source of reference is constituted by the serious studies of the PCF which have strendy appeared. Two of them dots with the party's engine and early years, Annie Knegel's Aux angener du community français (2 vols, Mousen, 1964),* and Robert Wohl's French Communium in the making, 1914-1924 (Stanford University Press, 1966). Both are indispensable for further study, whether our agrees with their conclusions or not. The PCF's gree-war history is critically, yet sympothetically dealt with by Gérard Wolter's Hartows du Parts Communiste Françaix (Somety, 1948), and its history upto 1976 is covered by Jacques Fairvel's Hussers du Parts Commartiste Français (Feyard, 1977),1 an objective account, acrapulequity fair, written from a 'liberal' point of view. Other peneral studies. include Ronald Tiersky's French Communism 1920-1978 (Columbia University Press, 1974), which gives a besef shatch of the party's development, followed by an interesting, controversal interpretation, and Philippe Robeleux's Hustowe malescore du Parts Comstrumete (a vols, Favord, 1980-a) and Edward Martimar's The Ruse of the French Communist Party 1930-1947 (Pober & Pober, 1984). The last two of those came out after the present wady was practically completed and ready to go to press, and so could not be referred to: but a level assument is given in the Note helow * Finally, on the PCP's side, there is the informative, but ruther dull and uncritical textbook, History du Paris Communiste Français, Manuel (Editions Securior, 1964), a collective work, commissioned by the leadership, Cloude Willard's short parallel study of the Socialist and Community parties, Socialisms is Communisms François (Artismid Colon, 1967, revised and enlarged 1978; the eleven scholarly made which make up Le PCP, Bisper in Problèmes, Edition Sociales, 1961), and Denielle Tartakowsky's brief, yet informative study, Una Hussian du PCP (PUP, 1982). To those, one must add the metal studies of specific superis of the party's kissery which have appeared, from time in time, in the Colors of Histoire do I IRM and no producesses, Colors of Histoire do I Institute Maurice Thirtee.

In the following pages, although every effort has been made to replace the PCF within the wider content of French except and French political life, no hypothesis has been just forward to account for the supposed 'strangeness' of the French Communist photometers, partly because there is no dearth of each hypothesis in other works some of them quies increasing and thought-provoking, and partly because I do not behave that the existence of the PCF really monds a special explanation. In my view, and I hope that is allocated in my midy, the party's emergence and relative success are due to perfectly straightforward historical factors as well as to the attraction it was bound to exert on those who, for our reason or another, want approach to the system. I believe Durothy Pickies expresses the same view when she writes:

The strength of Communican is a country late France—with a highly individualist and critical approach to politics, is perhaps, in first agir, surprising. In the council of left wing Republican and Revolutionary tradition it is loss to Part of the Communical party's strength country from its class to be, at the same time. Republican and Revolutionary white-heartedly Marian and the most left-wing party. In guidant of pertuanted appearance, amon 1947 (this no longer applies today – M. A.), has given it imple opportunity in demanstrate to incorne in the workers. Its closely knot married organization, based on occupational 'cells, more than on local branches, and its real, though not, it course, admitted control of the Trade Union organization, the C.G. T. & outsidered and strongers of the Trade Union organization.

Containment aiso has a strong advisogonal attraction for left-wing shell bereals, whose sufference is strong in France at the containment left-wing betrary and polescal periodicule which are concerned with Commission document with at with current polascal problems."

Family, one word about terminology. I have not avoided Community jurges – how could one do so in trying to understand a Community party from the mode? – but, as a rule, whenever I have send words and phrases which are pocular to Communities as general and so the PC. F in particular, I have put them in inverted commun. All translations from the French are mate, unless otherwise stated.

- I Both these facts are admirted by non-Communist and Communist historians. Cf., for example, the Acts of the 1968 Colloquium organised by the Fondation Nationals des Sciences Politiques, in Le Communisme en France (Armand Colin, 1969), and the studies of PCF historians working at the Institut de Recherches Marxistes (IRM).

- 6 Philippe Robneux as a former PCF member, now boutile to the party. His 'internal history' claims to reveal what happens behind the acenes in the PCF. After the publication of his 1,800 -page study in three volumes, non-Communist critics haded his work as a mine of information. However, his excessive reliance on private oral sources and on psychological analyses led to very critical reviews of his fourth volume (1984, 974 pp.) by Annie Kriegel in La Figuro and by Professor J. J. Becker in La Monda (Murch 1984). As for PCF historians, they were hostile from the start, and one of them, Roger Martelli, complained that Robneur's work was 'without consistency despite its build' (Califors d'History de PIRM, No. 11, 1982, p. 123).

The PCPs distinctive character

It is difficult to follow the PCF's history without knowing comething about its distinctive character and its own understanding of it. French Community are food of cavage that their party is different from all others, and although on their ligs 'didigrant' means 'better' (a value Independs one does not have to share!) it is true that the PCF is different to at least three respects - its relationship to the French working class, its place in French society, and its links with mearnational communium. On the first point, the standard Communist formula a that the PCF is "the party of the working class", a phrase which does not primarily refer to the party's impact on the working class or to the prodominantly projetures origin of its membership but to the fact that far from appealing to the community as a whole, it delaborately proclams that its starting point is all circumstances is the interests of the working closs (as at sees them, of course). Even when the PCF streams as automal character, as a him done more the and tusts, it is always around the working class and areaset "the boursecase' that autuand unity a contemplated. This approach means from the Margint concepting of the relationality between initial classics. and pointed parties, a relationable which, although very complex, bods down to the belief that the conflicting interests of conflicting classes find their political expression in the expresses of different political parties. However, these parties do not sperely reflect the views of a given class, they help to mould them. To use Margiot terminology, they are part of 'the superstructure' of society and then enjoy 'relative autonomy'. There is no autometic correlation between the behaviour of a party and that of the class it represents, for there are any number of 'mediations's between them, but ultimately, Marketts contend that one cannot underwand the former without reference to the latter. They also mount that a particular purty may represent a group of classes (e.g. the French Radical-Socialist porty which in the thereign was the party of the urban and rural poury-bourneousis) or a fraction of a class (e.g. the Social-dissocratic parties, attacked by Letts in the champions of a privileged auction of the working class.

the so-called Tobour aristotracy").

The PCF classe to be 'the party of the working class' is based on Margist theory and on Communist factics. The theory asserts that the working class is 'objectively revolutionary' bucums, independently of the subsective feelman of some of its members, it does not empy the full frace of us labour and cannot put an end to its 'exploitation' (i.e. the fact that employers her off its inbuse) without putting on end to the capitalist system, without making a social 'revolution'. The word 'revolution' has not always had the same meaning for the PUF, but despite all variations (offecting the form rather than the content), it has connatently stood for the replacement of the present social order (as which profit as easy to be frage) by normbons (which promises greater prosperity through the people's ownership and control of the means of production). As 'the party of the working class', the PCF is therefore 1940 facto a 'revolutionary purty', the 'revolutionary vanguard" of the working class. As for the party's tactics, they have largely been determined in the light of the prevailing needs and mond. of French workers (even when the overall strategy was worked out as conjunction with the Cosmotern in Moscow) and PCF leaders have been announ to keep in shoul Letins's advant that the vanguard most expensity be one step shead of the whole class (otherwise at cannot lead.) it., but one step only (otherwise it entage expect to be followed). That they have not always been successful in this respect will become plant in the course of this grady, but we shall also see that they were seidom. completely out of touch with French workers' formags, except perhaps as 1937-9 and for a brief period in 1940.

Aithough it calls itself 'the party of the working class', the PCF does not claim that all workers follow its lead or indeed can ever do to, for it argues that capitalism does not automatically arouse the will to change it among its 'victims'. For a variety of sussous, personal, cultural, and above all their different experience, some workers full under the influence of 'bourgeois ideology' and 'swallow' 'the bours' propagands' that all members of society have oursino interests. Others, in greater aumbers, we traighted by 'reformant', a word we shall frequently come across in the course of this study, and which, in the Communist vocabulary, means the theory that reforms, jointly implemented by capitalists' and workers' representatives, can so improve the system that revolution becomes unnecessary. The present PCF view is that workers who are under 'reformant' influence cannot all become revolutionaries, but only a majority of them, whilst the remainder can be wen over to a policy of malitant struggles for ammediate objectives. This house is at the heart of Communest-Socialist relations and we shall return to it more than once.

Family, in the PCF's view, 'the party of the working close' is best tested to be the champion of other classes and strata which are appreciable by capitalism, and whose mivebox depends on close unity with the lebour movement. In the 1930s, the PCF took up the planar council by the Radical statement. Deleder, and called on all French most and women to unite against 'the two hundred families', i.e. the rich people who were altegedly the real rulers of France. Today, the phrase most companyly used in unity against 'a handful of monopolists'. A social estagory to which the PCF attaches special importance in the intelligention, and nowadays party spokemen by great emphasis on the albance with intelligentials.

The PCF's place in French society is closely linked to its claim to be the revolutionary party of the working class. As a permanent challenger of existing austriations. French Communica did not expect and could not expect that it would ever become a constituent part of the present social fabric. Both through choice and outside epopulation at his been and stall as an outsider - though not necessarily an outcast, except during some periods of its history (e.g. the 1930s) and the cold war decade). This has not prevented as ultra-seft critical (such at Trutaleyests in the totals and both Trutaleyests and Magusts in the 1960s) from charging it with having become a conservative "institution" which is now fully integrated within the system as a corult of external 'bureaucratiantion' and external 'Soviet pressures'. We shall discuss these craticions in due course. 2 On the other hand, many right-wing and liberal commentators have described the PCF as 'anplies body', either because it is controlled by Moscow (on this they agree with the nitro-left), a charge which is further examined below, or because it is fundamentally a 'compy-securité', a phrase comed by Annie Kramait and taken up by Ronald Tiersky, who wastly translates at by 'countercommunity'. For Annie Kriegel, 'A community perty, ambedded in a country in which it does not hold gower. functions as party-society, the counsersociety which it constitutes in the interior of the global society prefigures the socialist society which g wishes to substraine for the established society after the conquest of power' * Ronald Turrity, queting the statement, adds in a footnote: This conception does not imply, however, that the future regime is to he are exact reproduction of the Party measurement or the future society.

an exact reproduction of the countercommunity. This important distinction is perhaps distinction to quickly by Tarriky, who make to understante the against once of the difference, strendously asserted by the PCF, between party and noticely. Community is asserted that party is a solutiony organisation, whereas human society obviously is not, and that they would not dream of imposing the mine common outlook and discipline on the rest of society, either now it is the foture.

The being that the PCF, or any Community party for that matter, is a countercommunity rests on two aspects. One is that communion is more than ordinary politics but is usen by its followers in a new way. of life. This is one of the very few aspects on which both Communists. and non-Community caree, but it hardly seems to justify the view that the party is a 'countercommunity', unless one were to apply the label to all groups which have their own Weltenschmang, the Christion churches for example. The very phrase 'countercounterwasty' #48greats that an sourceg the party. Communicate run sway from the human community at large, at which previously they find themselves may fits to a greater or lessor degree. It is an interesting hypothesis, which probably applies to a number of undividual cases, but on the whole it is poly a hypothesis. Deducation and attachment to the party may border on blind (anaticism, and at times have done as, but they do not necessarily lead to it, which is what the concept of 'countercommunity' amplies, perhaps unwittingly. Moreover, the various 'mutations' of French Community, recognised by all observers, and especially the changes which have taken place since 1968, have somewhat weakened the cruchbalay of the myth that Communists move and have their being to mine mysterious province, unfactornable to the outsider. Per better or for wome, the PCF has now become part of the French political acenery, so to speak

The other aspect is that the party has spent searly all its life as opposition so that, according to the critics, it has had to develop an opposition mentality in order to survive. There is some truth in this, particularly when one looks at the cold war period, but even if we leave used the PCF's short spell of manuscrial participation in 1945–7, and the presence of Communician in the government uncertyle, we shall find that French Communician have never been more oppositionism, him a great many anarchism for example, but have according to the setting up of alternative organis of power (lake neverts) or the prelound seform of existing metitations in order to push democracy to its utmost limits ('In dismocrates poursie junge' an bout', as the 1976 sind congress put it). For all these reasons, it means that the concept of 'cutasterconstitutely' is not really adequate and should be replaced with that of different and/or distinctive community.

Moreover, like the working close which it closure to represent, the PCF is both part of the system and is opposed to it. It is part of the French political system unamuch as, like all French parties, at has been influenced by French traditions, French customs and French culture, and also because it has played an amportant role in French local government since the 1930s. Outre a number of French people. have been used for years to livens in gross where there are Communit-controlled municipalities, and some who would not draws of voting for them as automal electrons are severtheless quite content to be ruled by them at local level. On the other hand, the PCF's preclaimed objective is undoubtedly 'to change society', and because of this, it has inversibly refused to be part of a broad "consensms' and extually erressed that it is 'not a party like the others'. Despute all stracks on its organisational propercies, including periodic susbursts by some of as members, it has doesedly stuck to their end, to date, shows no man of being willing to allow the clinkes among transport asternal transfe which are common to other political parties.

It is because of the PCP's unique place as French society that it is difficult to study as history to one would that of any 'ordinary' pointed party. Such as approach would hade the wood for the train in the same that it would describe the party's resources to the various events in the aution's factory alongside the responses of other polytical forces, but would give disproportionate importance to outside events at the expense of the soner motivations of Prench Communities. Admittedly, the PCF has been and is as deeply affected as any purty. by developments which it did not and could not control, but its reaction to them has not been a gurely emparical one. In other words, Prench potitical developments cannot wholly account for the PCF's behaviour. They should get her by some as so many testing graineds for the application of a long-term strategy which is based on a compreheneres philosophical documes, Marsiam, Marsiam, of course, lays great stress on local and national peculiarities (even if the Cassrevenut movement and the PCF in particular only paid his survice to this aspect for a long time), but it also asserts that the change from caputations to succeives, which is the reason of law of all Consequent parties, is an international same. To try and analy the PCF misside the context of Marxison and the international Communical movement is really to have *Hamis*e without the Prince.

This naturally brings us to the third original characteristic of the PCP, its holts with incernational Communions. We shall see that when the party was founded, it was as a section of a highly contralised organisation, the Communiot International, and as it remained affiliated to it for twenty three years, one should be aware of the chief hadmarks in the Communion's history. The latter can be divided into four distinct periods up to 1939,* and to this we should add two distinct phases between the outbreak of the moond world war in 1939 and the International's dissolution in 1943.

The first purish (1919-30) was distinuted by the Communist belief that revolution in Europe was imminent. The Communist corresponding strategy was to harren the formation in all European countries of revolutionary Communist parties, saidy 'to lead the measure to revolution.' It listed twenty-now strangent conditions for affiliation. When after lengthy debates a majority of the French Socialist Party accepted these conditions, it became in effect the PCF.

The second period (1931-7) was characterised by the Communist realisation that European capitalism and entered a phase of 'partial ambiliation' and, consequently, that the prospects of a proletarian revolution had 'amportanty receded'. The Community's corresponding strategy was to call for unsted working-class resistance to 'the onelought of the bourgeome', a strategy embodied in the slogan of the 'Unsted Front'. The period was also that of 'bolshevantion', i.e. profound organizational reform of all Community parties. On both masses, the PCF began by embborshy fighting against the International.

The third period (1927-33) was dominated by the Communist soumption, largely mainted by Statin, that 'social-democracy' (a.e. the Second International) was but a 'wing of faminin'. The Communityra's corresponding arrangy was in advocate 'United Front from below', as united action over the heads of and against the reinstance of social-democratic leaders. The latter were diabled 'social familiary' Electorally, the mass slogas was 'Class against class', a.e. working-class parties (Communists) against bourgeois parties (all others, including Socialists). For the Communities is a whole, the period was one of narrow accurangem, for most of its acctions, including the PCF, it was one of political isolation.

The fourth period (1915-9 was marked by the Communer belated retination of the function throat. The Communers's corresponding armagy was to serve the United Frant of Sequines and Communities to mercon, and successfully as a number of constrain such to France; and broaden it one a Popular Frant of workers and models channe against forcion. The PC F's role was crucial and France was given as its example to others by the Committee tendership. Organizationally, it was during that period (after the 1935 arventh and late congress) that the International's decemprations left national Community per this from to distortions their own day to-day pulsarse, provided professions internationalism, and topolity to the U 55 R nore preserved.

During the second starid way, the Commission went shough two phone. The /wer phone. September 1939—June 1931: corresponded to the portral when the forest Union was not involved in the tear. It was characterised by the Commission a rapid description of the war between Commission and the teat in anymether on both usins and by an east for the conclusion of an immediate puncy. This placed a musber of Commission person, including the PCP, in a very difficult position. The accord phase. June 1941-diay 1943 began when Hither structed the Soviet Union, which resulted in the formation of an Angle-American-Soviet confirm. All Commission parties then mapperted, 'the mits facint true'. The Commission should indicate part to play sport from being an anni-Herier propagated matchine. It was finally described in 1943 in lowing outsived as mithilates.

For the whole of the Committeen's exposure, it was regarded by its members as the 'world Communit Party', and most the Roman Balthevill section was the only one to have guined power, it became, in theory as well as an practice, the besting body within the letternetional Marouver, bequity to the Sovert Lason, 'the firm land of socialgay , but one the treathering of projets are suferinteriologic. At far as the P.C.P is concerned, it is therefore tempting to conclude, in there Pening critics have done that it took its orders from Moscow'. However, the Pt F study classes that it never had to obey' the Committee but that it took part as an open partner in the collective alaboration of its policies. The treaslin about reaching a balanced view on this saw a that our has to discribingly lacts from matives. (In the facts themselves, there can hardly be any designorment, more both page-Contribution to different encountry recognize that the Commerce was contrained and that it shall much except that the phobal strainer of world communium had to take the interest of the Soviet Union this account. When we come to motives, it as a different bettle of fish. To the non-Communit view that the Soviet leaders 'sseed' the Committeen. as an agency through which they could extend their country's influence as a world nower, the Community oppose the view that the samof the Commercy was world revolution, not the strengthening of a big. power. As generiy all the Leagrantespel's moves could be accerpreted up either way, according to one's political beliefs, it is not possible for the historian who is out a mind render to pursue the easter. We get on firmer ground when we look at the actual way in which the relationship between the International and one of its acctions (the PCF for our purpose; did in fact evolve over the years. The following chapters will show that there were repeated clashes between the PCF and the Cit until 1924 and that these culmonated in the International's victory: that major clinks occurred between 1925 and 1934, but that they were for less serious and did not question the CT's authority as such: that the 1934-4 Popular Front policy was jointly arrived at by the Committee and the PCF, with the latter playing at one stage a parametring role; and finally that levelty to the Consistern in 1939-40. put the PCF in an untenable position of having to denounce 'the imperabit war on the one hand and continue to call itself 'untifascist' on the other.

After the dissolution of the Commerces in 1943, the Bolshevik Party, renemed Communist Party of the Soviet Usion in 1951. (CPSU), continued to be the leading party in the movement, despite the coming to power of other Communist curties, first in asstern Europe and later in Chang and the Far East. The CPS U's outhorsty was no longer organisational, but ideological and even emotional, but this made it greater, not insalter. The PCF, for example, took up the label "Stalianst" as a matter of pinds and proclammed its "anconditional. attachment to the Soviet Union'. Again, one is tempted to upost of complete dependence on Moscow, to be met once more by the Comassociat protect that the PCF has always been an independent party, in paster as well as an fact. The truth probably has between the two extremes, and it is interesting to note that a number of non-Communic scholars refuse to explain the PCF's policies by sole reference to 'Moscow', whilst an increasing anaphet of contemporary PCF historians no longer deny that 'in the past' their purty was not plways a completely free agost. However, what is more useful than a sweeping general statement, allegedly valid for all periods of the PCF's hostory, is to examine the three places through which the

PCF-USSR relations went from 1945 to the present day

The first phase (1945-95) may be called the post-war Stalanst phase ¹⁶ It began with the PCP's cautious arounds in avoive a specifically 'French read to occalants' (Thorst's Times interview in 1946), ¹⁴ but the start of the cold war soon put paid to that, and when the Commitme was founded at 1947 (with PCF puricipation), although it claimed not to be a resurrected Committee, all CPs looked upon it is michorizative. They all ochood its 1948 condomnation of Tito as a 'nationalist deviatment' and they all defended the ragged trials which took place in easiern Burope in the early 1950s.

The second phase (1956-68) may be called the post-noth congress phase. The PCF publicly endorsed the criticism of Stales made at the 20th congress of the CPSU, despute the private uniquings of some of its leaders. It refrained from voicing any designorment with the CPSU until 1964, but atstand, came wholly on its ade against Mat Tie Tung. In 1964, stald criticisms of the USSR begon to appear in the PCF press, but the French CP remained the CPSU's most loyal ally within the interparational Community movement, in their posterior with the Imian party.

The shord phase (1968 to the present day) may be called the period of 'socialism in the colours of France', marking a fully independent international position. In the early 1970s, the media began to apply the label 'Euro-communian' to the PCF, but this, so we shall see (cf. Note below), in a most minleading label. What matters much more that labels is that the PCF's show of independence began dramatitally in the summer of 1468 when it condemned Soviet multury intervention in Caschoslovskia. At the end of 1968, the party adopted a Manefesto which, for the first time in French Communist history, aurlined a "French read to secucions" which owed nothing to the Soviet at any other 'model'. This new approach brought together the French and Italian Communist parties, and above all, wirecord unorucodested attacks on the Soviet government for its stand on human rights, especially at the 1976 22nd PCF congress. Since 1976, there has been a merked change of emphasis, with the PCF streamer that the incidiat countries' "balance-short is globally positive", but a return to the 'unconditionality' of the past mema most unlikely unce the party continues to sesent its independence and to criticise what it calls "the luminations on democracy" which still exact in the Soviet Union. [4]

Note on "Euro-communica"

The term 'Euro-communium' is a made creation which the PCF never really laked, and which it has dropped altogether since 1978 as a description of an own arrangy. Although it is still used by a number of non-Communist critics, it is a very misleading label, make its auti-Soviet, 'revisionant' 13 and 'reforman' implications (e.g. the outlook of the Spanish Communist leadership) do not apply to the PCF. For this reason the label to seldom used in this study, but in a proved unavoidable on a few occurrous, it is worth stressing that the PCF's own brand of what was called the 'Euro-communist' approach was made up of a number of original factors, of which the following four stand out: first, the resection of all 'models', on the ground that French socialism. must be built 'in the colours of France' (but independence from, say, Moscow does not mean heatship to or the designation of Moscow), secondly, an attitude of critical, but solid support for all the socialist countries and for the world revolutionary forces, which stremes their achievements whilst not besse bland to their faults; thirdly, a commitment to a peaceful, democratic revolution, which means that the long-standing aim of aboliahing capitalist property relations and ounting the hourgeouse from power (revolution) restains, even though the form through which the goal is to be achieved has changed in accordence with present-day realizies, and listly, a strategy based on the busiding of a broad popular allience, but with continued emphasis on the leading role of the working class, on the need to wane 'the class struggle', and on the class character of Communist politics. Readers are saked to keep these important points in mind every time they come across the phrase 'Euro-communium' in the course of this study. aspecially in Chapter 7 and in Chapter 8.

Note on the Comissory

The sub-title of this book, From Common to 'the colours of France', implies that the PCP's history should be seen as an advance from the lower stage of dependence on the Committee to the higher stage of suttenties and materialy. This is indeed how modern French Community interpret their party's evolution. But it is fair to add that, in their opinion, the 'lower stage' was not a reprettable abstration, but rather a necessary phase through which the PCF had to no before it could stand on its own foot. From a machinistic point of view, 'noctalism in the colours of France' is the negation pure and mosple of what the Commissen mood for; from a dialectical point of view, the

Introduction II

Third International was study an indispensible negation of the 'notial characterists' of Socialist parties in 1914, whilst the present independence of Communist parties, of the PCF in particular, is a negation of the negation: it is reuses autonomy, but not at the expense of automational inlateraty

13 In the Communist vocabulary, 'revisionism' describes the attempt to 'revise' Marxism by playing down, or ignoring altogether, its revolutionary content. It arose towards the end of the nineteenth century (cf. Ch. I, p. 15) and it constantly reappearing, in one form or another, in the working-class and Communist movement.

Origins and birth (1880-1920)

Direct and indirect influences

Little queue Community payton, the PCF is the child of the marriage of two disemuted pertners, a general left and the October Revolution". I Its distant furnishers there the appropriate contact account and congruent theaters such in hour house, Fourier, Provides, Diangua, Japan and Leanutel and the manuscrath-century French working-class movement. The former all left their much on the PCF, dichier become the party incorporated their views into its theory and prountice or business it felt the need to react against them. * The latter provided French Communious with a rich tradesion of working-class malitancy to drow upon, ospecially the workers' avvolvement in the revolutions of 1855 and 1845 4 and with the first "model", according to Margantal of a profession state, the 1871 Paris Commune 3 On the other hand, the fragmentation of French mentions upol (40) (due to the concern's industrial backwardness, to the great differences among workers, both in terms of weges and the use of firms which employed thath, and to the revery among theny strongers treads , the slow growth of trade missions," and the executed challes between unions, which were impely angreho-syndropist," and incigint groups and portion, which traid to play a political rule, did not faculated the Creation of a party which combined mushet distring with workingclaim roots. In the end, such a party was founded. But only in $859-43. It can be considered as the PCF's direct account, and like its aroundchild, it was firmly based on Marsann.

The charf difference between Marsons and other trends is that it brought together tectaint theory and the organized inhous movement it cleaned to give a accountic apperpentating of beauty by backing the existence of ment cleanes with the level of production, 2 it brocket the aboutton of all cleanes as a result of a presistarum revolution. 2 and it streamed that the idea arms art had to be achieved by the weeking clean mod. Because of this, Mars injection is an arguest first may the femalesses of an independent working-clean party. His first Preach thempion were juice Guanda, who had men him in Landon where he had find after the colleges of the Paris Commune, and Paul Lafargue, who had married one of Marx's daughters, Laura, In 1879, the two then managed to merge a manher of small socialist groups into a single party, the Parts des Travaulleurs Socialistes de France. A year aftet ets formation, Guarde drew up a detailed programme, in counciliation with Maris, knowing as the Commissionests programmes ouccome its greenble included various paragraphs, each marriag with 'Considérext over ... Among the points to be 'considered', one was that the emancipation of the working class would lead to the emancipation 'of all human branes'; another was that social ownership of the means of production was demanded by 'the very development of capitalist society", and a third one was the need for the working class to have its own political party. In 1863, a split occurred because a majority, ledby Pupi Brousse, challenged Guarde's alleged "dictatorship" and 'rield Marxism' Guesde replied by calling his opponents 'porribifurer' on the ground that they confund themselves to what was 'possible' under the capitalist system, and he and his followers set up in alternative party, the Parts Outrier Princate (POP). The POF's chief activities were the spreading of Marinst education, electoral contests. and taking up workers' struggles for bread-and-butter demands. In this last respect, it was unaque among complet groups, and as a consequence, it was acknowledged as the only generally Socialist perty by the Labour (or Second) International when the latter was founded in 1884.

However, the development of the industrial working-class movethest took place largely outside, if not indeed against all political groups. In 1842 the Bourses die Francis, manaly set up by the government as mere labour exchanges but eventually functioning as modern British trades councils, formed a national Pederation which, three years later, merged with the automal federation of trade unions to become Prance's first trade union centre, the Confederation Gindrale du Travail (CGT). The CGT was prodominantly enercho-syndicalist and regarded all political parties and politicases with contempt. At the other extreme, a number of 'independent Societies,  so called because they rejected the discipline of any group. of which they were nominal members, advocated electoral work as the man form of activity. Their programme to this effect, adopted at Smart-Mandt in 1896, was endorsed by the POF in 1897 for the sake of unity. Not content with being parliamentarians first and foremost, name independent Societies, wented to become minuters in well, and one of them, Mallerand, sound a 'bourgoos government' in 1999, a decision which was in keeping with the 'revisionism' practical by the German Bermann and other European Socialists. Bermann wanted to 'revise' Marzoum on the ground that a revolution was now obsolets since capitalism was peacefully evolving into socialism. Millerand merely draw the practical conclusion that a Socialist was partified in journing a capitalist government in order to having this process.

In 1903, nearly all the French socialist groups loss their separate identity by ionine either the mistant Parts Secondists de France, led. by Guerde, or the more moderate Parts Securitate Francaix, led by Jaurta. In 1905, in order to comply with the wishen of the Second International, the two parties merged usin a unide one, from then curverds known by its initials SFIO, which stand for Section Fromcasse de l'Internationale Ouvraire. The new earty adected a Unity Charter On paper, this was a victory for the Guesdist trend because the SFIO was described as 'n party of class strangle and revolution'; to fact, the real victor was Joures because, unbite Guesde, he did not simply repeat Marxist propositions in and our of consext, but suggested practical answers to the day-to-day problems which erose. Between 1904 and 1914, the SPIO's membership grew from $5,000. to 91,000, and its electoral support from $20,000 to $,400,000. On the negative side, the party's concern with elections lied to its neglect of the trude storon. The CGT retalisted by adopting in 1906 the mcalled Amona Charter which stressed that miscon had to work for the abolition of capitalism without bothering about 'parties and sects' which mucht have the same our, and by resorting to strikes, substant and 'direct action'. As a result, French workers were asked to choose between what Leaus scutturely called the 'parlumentary cretimen' of the SFIO and the mourrectionary tectic of the CGT

After 1906 and up to 1914, both the SFIO and the CGT moved to the right and became incremingly 'reformer' and 'class exists an analysis of the right and became incremingly 'reformer' and 'class exists an analysis of the CGT where it was led by Pierre Monatte and those who founded the poursel, Le Vie Ouevaire, in 1909. It provided the PCF with many of its early members. The diverce between the SFIO and the CGT weakened them both. The Socialists came to rely an the urban and rural petry bourgeoises more than the workers, whereas the CGT failed to uniquies more than 9 per capt of the labour force (In Brusan the proportion was 25 per cent and in Garmany all per cout.) In spite of these weakenesses, there was a good deal of militancy among the workers (1,250 strikes per year according the government's figures) and in rural trees. Important gains were made, such as the eleven-hour day in 1900, the eight-hour day for minors in 1905, and the introduction of a compulsory rest day in 1906. When the first world was broke out in 1914, French labour was already a powerful farce, but it was weakened by two major incurred optics, the spix between its political and industrial wings, and the split between reformants and revolutionerses.

The second of these spints was destined to become a major factor towards the foundation of the PCF. During the war, it took the forth of a clash between support for and opposition to the government's wat effort. In theory, such a clash need never have occurred, made all the parties of the Second International had plodged at various international congresses, especially at the 1913 Bude Congress, that they should 'explort' the cruss unbered to by a world war 'to haven the downfull of capitalist domination. In practice, things turned out differently, and with the enception of the Russian Bolohevaks, 12 each major European Societist party came out as appoint of its own goveraspect and out 'potrotion' before everything else. Whereas Getgoup Socialists did make a list-manute strengt to work out a joint. policy with their French partners and decided to vote for military credits after prolonged debetes, 17 the SFIO enmediately responded. to Posscard's appeal for a "necreal wases" (Farmers secres) and six addrains to voting for military crudits, it delegated two of its members. Guesde and Sembat, to become minuters in a war government of national unity. Although Socialist government puriscipation ceased in September 1917, the party continued to support the war right to the very end.

The fact that the Second International had collapsed at the outbreak of the war and that nearly all as member parties. Ind gone back on their piedge to oppose the war was later used by Lemis to restify the formation of Communiat parties everywhere. He claimed that Social-democratic!! Insiders had fasted to understood that 'imperability wars' occurred because of the economic and colonial revolutionaries was to change the war among restour into a struggle among classes. This failure, he argued, could not be blamed on individuals, innce so their prominent leaders were anvolved, "but was in fact the culmination of a trend which he called 'opportunism' and which amounted to the energicing of long-term working-class internation for the take of temporary concessions granted by the ruling class. According to him, the social rost of appartitions was the summand of a privileged section of the working class, 'the lebour arestocracy', to whom the capitalists allowed a few 'exambs' out of their 'super-profits'. Most of the Social-democratic leaders belonged to the lebour arestocracy, he maintained, and were cut off from the rest of the working class both by their way of life and by the entired such a way of life bend. They had come to reject revolution and to prefer 'class collaboration'

In France, the somet necrote put us end to the SPIO-CGT divorce, and in its stend there arose a clash between an initially powerful pro-wer majority and an increasingly significant anti-war manorary. At first, the larger was confined to the castal workers' mason, had by Alohouse Mercheun, and to the renders and supporters of La. Via Oversire, led by Pierre Mountie and Alfred Rouner, but as May 1915, the nati-way feeling aprend to the SFIO, some of whose sections took up a pacifist stand, supported by such people as Jean Longuet, a grandian of Karl Marz, it was also in 1915 that two international anti-war conferences took place, one for socialist women organised in Bern by the German, Clara Zetkin, and the other sponsecond by Italian Societists and branches together 'contrasts'11 and left-wingers in the Swan village of Zammerwald. Prance was represented at Zammerweid by two trade nanousts. Merrheim and Bourderon. The 1900 Frenchmen voted against Lemm's resolution. urging 'revolutionary action against the wor', which was defeated by numerous votes to twelve. The Conference somed a Mandesto demanding a 'just peace', but the western prem amored it. In France, a clandeston committee, the country remove abban, was set up, and in November 1925, it changed its name to County pour la regriss des relations internationales. In April 1916, another international conforence was held at Kuenthal, again in Switzerland. It demanded an immediate armistice and instructed Socialists not to vote for makeary credits. The effect of these events as France was to uplit the labour movement into three wends, the pro-war right, led by Guesde, Sembut and Rependel, the pure first course, led by Longuet, Foul Foure and Pressession, and the san-war left, led by Rouner, Monatte and Meryheim. This last trend grew counderably as the war west on and as human lives were lost to an apparent gain. In 1916, and still more in 1917, many civilians were on strike to call for an end to the war, and soldiers began to mutany on a large scale. The appearance in 1916 of Henry Barbusse's La Fau, a disturbinely realistic account of life in the trenches, further strengthened nan-way feelings. These received a new impetus in March 1917 with the news that the Russian Tiar had buth overthrown and that variety appairtum to the way was vessed in the countiest workers' and possents' councils (soviets) that upread throughout the land.

When the October Revolution 15 bruke out, people suddenly learned that the Bolobevik government had moved a call for an armstion and for a peace treaty based on 'no sanezations and no indemnetics". In addition, although the same and actions of the Bolsbevik revolution were neither understood nor widely known, the setting unof a self-proclamed working-class and present state fired the attenuatetion of many western workers. Unlike their governments which had sent maktery forces to destroy the new Russian regime, they expressed their solidarity with the soviets and formed 'Hands off Russia' commerces. In London, the dockers refused to load the SS Felly George with makery equipment against the Soviet Republic, and some after, the Dunkark dockers followed unit. Nearly all strikes, matasses and demonstrations sucheded withdrawal of western forces from Russia among their demands. To these, one wast add the revolt of the Black See enilors, in which furure promotent Community such as André Marry and Charles Tallon played a big role. In the end, the strength of the protest movement compelled the French government to withdraw sts armed forces from Russia, including the war fleet that had been tent to the Black Sea. Other governments had no option but to do the School or .

Soon after the October Revolution, seem by the Bolishevsks as the preliade to the world revolution, Lemm and his followers founded the Communiat (Third) International. Its aim was to replace the supposedly discredized Second International with a generally revolutionary centre, freed from appartments. This but print, which was to prove a major attentional block in subsequent negotiations between the SF1O and the Communers, was some by Lemm as an issue of principle. There was no point, be argued, in creating a new organisation if it was going to be distincted by the same 'gang' which had let the workers down. They samply had to be removed to allow for the revival of 'genuine' socialism, and consequently, a decisive break with them became one of the landamental conditions for justing the Third International. The Foundation Congress of the new body was held in Moscow in March 1919, a few weeks after the inorder of Ross Lunamburg and Karl Lurbknecht in Germany, and barely a few days before the start of the shart-lived Hungarian revolution.  Britain and France were not represented by that as yet man-existent Communist parties but by small lieft-wing groups. The two most important parties in attendance were the Russian Botshevits and the German Spartahushund  The conference took the deciman formally to set up the Third International and it called up all endance include parties to post its runks. In France, the old Zammerwald committee renamed strett Counté pour l'adhémen à la 111e Internationale, and under the lendership of Paul Vaillant-Countrier, Loriot, Rapporport, Souverne and others, it published a Bullotin Communiste advocating affiliation to the Communisters.

The SFIC's reaction to the Comastern appeal went through vari-6th staces. At the February 1930 Strasbourg congress, the party was sold upon those factions, an apti-Compatern maht, a pro-Computern left, and a centre (secleding Longuet and Lius Bloop) which advocated rebuilding the Second International on a new basis and was thus known as the Reconstructours. After heated debutes, the congress decided to leave the Second faternational by the incremive impority of 4.330 votes to 337, but by an equally impressive majority of $.031 Potes to 1,641, it rejected anenodate affiliation to the Commers but decided to send two of its members, Cachin and Fromard, 'to enter anto negotiations with . the accredited organic of the Communist Interpational Caches and Prosect arrived in Russia in the middle of June and stayed until the end of July. They had a loop talk with Lemm. and were struck by his insusance that a break with reformants was exceptual. Usuary with them, he mad, was out of the question, because it would be as appropried unity; French Socialists supply had to choose between two arreconcilable polycies. The French delegates had not expected such uncompromising gernangence. Accustomed as they were to deals and compromises, they were somewhat taken aback. At first, they volumely crued to defend their party, rightists, contracts and all, but in the end, they were won over both by Lemit's arguments and by what they saw in Russia. Cachan in particular was fired with enthusium for the Rissian "Commune". A practical result of their slowly-changing attitude was that they accepted Lenin's apyritation to attend, as observers, the second Compiters congress which opened on the 21st July and whose man purpose was to lay down the conditions for soming the Third International. They left Russia before these conditions, twenty-one in all, were finally drawn up, but they sank with them a lerge addressed to the SPIO which included the most important of them ²¹ The twenty-one conditions were made public in August and were published by L'Hustawast, the SFIO daily paper, on 8 October. Here is a summary of them:²²

- Generally Communist propagated against the hourgeome and reformers.
- Remove reformats from hading positions.
- 3. Combane legal and sliegal work.
- 4. Propagands in the armed forces.
- Win the support of poor peasants and 'neutralian' the rest of the rural population.
- Expose 'social petriotism' and 'social pecificm' 21
- 7. Break with reforming and pentrum.
- Support liberation movements in the colonies.
- Work in mean organisations, eg. trade visions. Forth Continualist Tractions⁽²⁾ within them.
- Combin the Amsterdam International and support the international Federation of Red Tende Umone.
- Bring the parliamentary proup under party discipline.
- 12. Organize the party on the basis of 'democratic contrabus'.¹⁶
- Periodic purges of petty-bourgeon elements.
- 14. Support the Soviet Republic.
- 15. Adopt a new party programme.
- 16. Accept all Computern decisions.
- 17. Adopt the name of Communit Party.
- 18. Publish Commerce documents in the party press.
- 19. Convene an extraordinary congress to endorse the above points.
- 20. Ensure that leading party bodies include at least a two-thirds majority of people who supported Contratera affalution before the second enginess.
- 21. Expul those who reject the above conditions.

The most important features of these twenty-one conditions are, first, their strangency, intended to deter waverers and 'unreliable elements', secondly, their endorsement of Lenin's political views (revolution, dictatorship of the prolatarist, anti-imperialism and anti-reformann), and finally, the stress on the need for discipline in Community ranks. The highly operalised character of the new lateractional was meant as a reaction against the contempt for international decisions which had characterised the Second International. It is fair to add, however, that the Comintern lenders also recognised the need for flexibility for example Article sixteen pledged that the C I Executive would take into account 'the great diversity of conditions' facing individual parties and would issue general directives 'only when that (was) possible'. As for the immistaliably 'Russian' character of the Cominters, it was defended on the ground that Russia had so far born the only country to have made a successful revolution and could thus serve as an example to others. But whereas Leans had expressed the hope that other countries would man follow and he able to take the lead, his successor, Stalen, eventually presented his country as a model, a country which did great herm to the Countmiant movement, and to the PCF in particular, at least until the 1960s. In 1930, however, the mosel of many SF1O rank-and-file members and of some leaders was that the new lateractional offered the French Socialist party a road which could lead to success unce a had obviously worked in Russia. In view of this, it did not come as a great we prost that the SF1O congress held at Tours in December 1920 voted in fevour of affiliation to the Counters.

However, the hasonic Tours congress, which we shall presently examine, cannot be explained solely as terms of the October Revolution and the foundation of the Consisters, for it was as stoch, if not more, a response to the evalution of French society and the French labour movement between 1914 and 1920. The changes which occurred in France during and after the war were so does that some critical speak of a 'second industrial revolution' 17 This is comewhat excesgive, bucause the new intention presented many contradictory fortures. In particular, eithough the state intervened in the accounty on an unprecedented ecale, largely to ensure adequate supplies of armoments, the actual control of production remained in private bands throughout, although in answer to wartime needs, sterallurgy and acromentars grew to employ over a multiple workers, in 1901 on equal number could gall be found in the older-exablished textile industry; ²⁴ aithough most production led to greater working-class concentration (e.g. at Rengalt-Ballancourt, the labour force incremed from 5,000 in 1914 to 25,000 in 1918), ²⁴ amail and medium firms were stall umportant, and so were the moddle strate and they unforestal party, the so-called Radical-Sociation party, although the CGT secretainely became a social partner of the emolowers, countless strakes took place curade us make to protest against inflotion, frame prices and the worsening of living standards; elthough the SFIO leadership was mostly reformat, many of its runk-and-fale members were revolutiomany. One cannot agree with Angre Kriegel that the uplit in the Prench labour movement became a thing of the past as the war ended, for m the encological geolyses of the PCF historian, Jean-Louis Robert. reveal, in 1918-30," . . . the arms or regions on which the revolutioancy manority I was, based twere, those in which [there had been] strong trade union activity and struggles during the war, whereas the majority rather [sended] to be based on those areas or regions where such activity and struggles (had been) weak! ³⁹

Before 1916, working-class enlittency was rather limited, but 'war wearingsu increased the willingness to strike".  and the lost two years of the war were years of great accust uprost. The same can be said of the years following the armestice which witnessed a 'radicalisation of the working clear. 31 This was due to political reasons (the government's bank repression of the pecifiet opposition and its military intervention nearest Soviet Russia) and to secto-economic reasons (labour mobility, quick demobilisation, and growth of trade union memberthip) 37 The wanting of the eight-hour day in 1919 further incressed. Entitately, of which the most propertiest manufestation was the 1930. radwaymen's strike, which ended in utter failure because the CGT. the face of staff approximental repression, ordered a return to work. without having secured any concessions. Militant French workers, who had been stunned the year before by the right-wine landslide at the General Election (in which the SFIO had loss 32 seam in spite of having gained 400,000 votes), hegan to low faith in the traditional forms of action betherto known to them. Sence neither strikes nor electrons memed to lead anywhere, the way lay open for a third road. It was the road suggested by the Commerce and it was that coad which the Tours Congress decaded to take.

The Foundation Congress (Tours, December 1920)

The Tours Congrue, which began as the 18th congress of the SFIO and ended as the Foundation Congrue of the PCF, opened on Christmes Day 1920. A successful resolution, moved right at the start, ensured that affiliation to the Consisters would be discussed before anything else. Actually, the decision to affiliate was a foregone conclusion made a majority of districts and areas had siready mandated their delegates to vote for it. What was it stake was whether all the CI's terms would be accepted and whether there would be a split. The three main treads at the congress were the pro-Committers left, based on the existing pro-affiliation committee; an anti-Committers right, made up of 'defenciate' (supporters of national defence) and Rissistants (because they resisted affiliation), the latter led by Blum, and a centre (the majority) which was study split into late converts to affiliation (such as Cachia and Promerd) and Reconstructours (such as Longast) who wasced so many reservations about purping the Committees) norn that an effect they tenk an anti-officiation stand. The big quantum mark was whether the course tolt would be able to personale the course tight to extend in the party after the expected majority state in favour of affiliations. On this critical image pumple like Promord were unhappy about the C.Fo encurence that there was no every for Languar and his frames in a gapsyonely executivenessy pages.

The debute on afhineses tack up five days 12 The man speech as foreign was made by Carlina and the man speech against by Ulius, There was the most thorough communities of all the power spectrud, and Diver as particular, was our of his way to bring to light what, it has very brude alty differencesson. French Sociations from Bubblesing . Although it was the Roman Residence which had sharely framework that different are but week revolutionaries and reformation it week that in their discharge arrangle towards Service Rossis that the run water charly differed, upon both of them, and the whole congrues he that money came out as exapport of the new republic. If the resolutions tabled by Bayes hamself, well-drown or the last manual for abvirous lack of support , dad not decease flames, the two deads constituted before Congress, that of Cachin and Pressard for affiliations, on the operantel, and that of the Reconstructure. Longout and Fours, on the other, make at the diducer of forest Roma mainter all Dougrous neverments as the workers, most previous task and stressed the sper-world mentionner of the October Revolution. In his speech, Carlon habital the series of all distress to the experience of the horset Republic, adding that the new more easied upon all fortifiets 'to more and strongle attenues in a cas the new front of the latter netword it had created. Although he danged that he and Francerd has been 'mystefied by the Ramon revolutionaries', he defended all of their more committees policies. For enempte, he referred to the fact that they had disminstealed the land among the possions in-road of collectroscop it and americal that they had restant gity responded to the yearmings for tend owner. they among your and mobile presents, the intrastages of commons. eventually would gradually be brought to them, he added (blocker of the fuscod soliecterances of the 1920s 3 More importantly, he doer which the Buitheville' foreign policy as a policy of poner, adding, amains thunderous applicant, that 'the only people who are today rearrange a makey of conduct and war are not the Buishevaka, but out Prench militarrate'.

I be stone serom on which Cachin and Blum deflored were the party, the decreasing of the proposarut, various revolution and minutely defence. On the first one, Cachin classed that in conditions of foreign and civil war, only a deceptored party could have ensured victory, and that the success of the revolution to France demanded the same land of discipline. He stressed that no one should be frue from party control, least of all the parliamentary group, as had become common in the S F1O Submanually, the organisational principles he defended are still those of the present PCF, but for many years, they were applied with great registy although the exceptional accustion described by Caches to sustaly them had been encounted by a different one which was no longer, according to the Communists' own analysis, characterised by the prospects of an immension revolution, demanding the strict discusting which may have been accounty in 1920. As for Bium, he blootly said that he preferred a broad organisation in which everyone was free to voice his own ideas to the rigidly contralised Lenusst party, thus resterstant the Membeysk case against the Bolsheviks. The more of whether the party should allow 'facuous' still devides French Socialists from Consensates, the letter continuing to believe with Lenin that a revolutionary party ceases to be effective if all metabers, after democratic decreases, do not apply majority decisions. When Blum went on to charge Lenin with having created on charat party which relied on the 'motanets' and 'sheep-like violence of appropriate figures', he probably allowed his emotions to get the better of his judgement. For in all fairness, although Lense certainly believed in 'the mercer', he also thought they had to be politically advanted before they could be set in motion. One may disagree - on tactical, moral or any other grounds - with the Legimet policy (which is more than ever that of the present PCF) of always starting the answer to action, but it is not very fair to appear it with an appear to 'mateure' and 'passes'. Moreover, unlike Bhaque, Lenn did not betieve that a small number of activities should make a coup on the assumption that the 'sheep-lake' messes would be sure to follow. In fact, in his fumous April Theses, he said that before the revolution could take place, the Bolshrysks had to win over the mesority by means of 'patient explanation', and he repeatedly made the more point when advisors foreign Community on their tectics

On the dictatorship of the projeternet, Cachin defended the oneparty system which existed in Russia by anying that all untr-Soviet appositionists had journal the around counter-revolutionistics. That was historically accurate, but what Cachin could not foresee in 1900 was that Stalm inter-transformed a semporary assessing into a secred principle of Communist orthodoxy and that until 1960 or so the PCF distribilly achood him. Blum, for his part, assured Congress that he was permanally in favour of the dictatorship of the projeturest, but he added that it should be operated by his kind of party if it were not to become dictatorship pure and sample. What gave a good dash of credibility to Bhum's assertion was that Lemm and his improves probably under-assimated the great diffurgação becomes the dismacentic trust and associated Rhum's fours, it makes the issue of the extent to which Staliments was the interstable outcome of Lemmin. Modern Community body dany that this was the case, whereas their critics take the appoint view. The former point to Lemm's fight against burunaceacy and to his condomnstion of Stalie's authoritarianson. The latter rophy that, arrespective of Lemm's intentions, the one-party system is bound to be dictatoral. The controversy is still raping indep

The third bone of consumers was violent revolution. According to Cachan, it was 'the savagery of the rubag classes' which had forced the Russiants to use various maste, but in 'this are of barbarum', the Bolsheviks alone were displaying 'feelings of kindness and humanity' He added that handing the issuess of history on this issue were back to Guende, who had written that is all revolutions, 'the gain had completed the work of the ballot-box', and to Engels, who had described force in the matricestat through which social forces shotter 'the dead. foundated pointed forms. Blum, on the other hand, argued that the "purechast" conception of the revolution intelli apply to backward Rismo, but not to France. He further emerted that the Beisheviks standed the computer of political power as an end in stickly whereas western Socialists requested it as a means, the fundamental sum being 'the social transformation'. In one respect, this sepect of the debate is samewhat dated, largely because modern Community in the west now bank on the sombility of a non-violent revolution, but the relationship between the polynoxi and social uides of the revolution is stall topical. To the completet, first expressed by Blass and later taken mp by his processors, that Lanuauts put the sectors of political power before the need to change society. French Communicate have generally replied that one is engoamble without the other. Although this remains what the PCF thinks today, greater emphasis is non-put on the people's relf-activity, "Fautogestion", and less on state measures.

Family, Cachin and Blum clashed over national defence. Cochin clasmed that the stopus of 'automal defence' was used by the bourgeoine to make Prench workers support a war on Soviet Russia, and according to the record, the whole congress applicaded such sentiments. But Blum was right when he later complained that Cachin. had failed to discuss whether circumstances might ever arest when Socialists had to support a 'bourgeou government' which is waging a purely defensive true. Cachin's pumble excuse that at the time this was purely hypothetical would not be wholly securectory, and it is interesting to note that other pro-officience speakers, such as Freesard and Rappoport, were less reticeer and attacked national defence under capitalism as 'sheer deception'. However, Silum's macrison that Socielists should face the need to support entroped defence, even under capitalism, was greeted by many delegates' enery shouts. In vain did the speaker try to speed for calm, is vain did he say that while the majority would go and suck 'advengues' he and his friends would stay beland to guard 'the old firm', most of his inteners voiced their hostility, and when he should before he ast down, 'Does anyone here think I am not a secular?, he got a rude coply from Carner, "You're a confusionest."

The other amportant speaches at the congress were those of Froseard, the party secretary, and Longuet, as both were mostly concerned with the penative some of the expulsion of reformats demanded by the Commerce. Fround spoke on the 28th in the afternoon, but that morning. Congress had received a talegram from the CI, the notorious 'Zinoviev telegram', 31 which described Longuet. Feart and their group as 'determined agents of the bourgoon influence over the proletarist. Property ignored the challenge and east that "the resolution we sak you to vote for does not anythre noy expulsion', and he emphassed, 'No exputsion whatever' (The next day, he west further end openly mand, 'No, I do not agree with Zinoviev. As far as I am concerned, you are not agents of bourgoos. influence.') Then, he made an impossioned appeal to the centre right: "You have no right to leave us, you council, you meet not. We need you as you need us. Propert also expressed desagreement with the Comintern over curty work in the unious, classical that it controducted the letter's undependence,  and over too rand a conception of democratic centralism, american that the party should draw up a 'Menorities' Charter'. Longuet spoke ammediately after Prosserd and rejected the "Zinoviev telegram" as an insult coming from in International which he not an international of the projectance of all construct, but a specifically Russian International. After sweeting that he wanted unity 'with fury', he warned that he could not remain in a party which accepted the Commerces's outrageous terms.

An incident which is worth mentioning is that helf-way through Francis's spench, Clara Zethin made as unexpected appearance. The Francis government had refused her a van to enter France and no one knew how she had managed to come to Tours, but her presence as will us her appearanced appears to jour the Committee had as electric effect on the delegates. Her speech did not add anything new in the debute, but it contributed to raising the already high temperature of the congress. Our aboutd aim mention, two other agasticant interventions, that of the fado-China delegate, the future He Cla Manh, who said that by journing the Committee the party would at last give colonial quantions 'the importance they deserve', and that of Faul Visitiont-Counterer, who mented that formel unity' would be a 'currenterer' of the unity would by Jaurèn because it would hade the fact that the party included 'people who can no longer work together'

On 26 Duxember 1920, late at might, the vote was taken. The pre-affibition resolution of Carbin and Fresserd not 4,300 block votes, whereas the auts-off-lineaus resolution of Languet and Poure received 1,022. There were 597 abstentions, 44 votes for a proaffiliation procedurest and 60 for an ann-offiliation procedurest. Thus, Committee supporters got 68-7 per cent, 45 opponents 22-9 per cent, and obstemments $4 per cent. However, it was not all plain suching yet. A final attempt was made by the Reconstructours to cut their losses. They demanded a vote on a resolution, moved by Martral, caling upon Concress to refuse the expulsions dumeded by the Commercia, warning that they would leave if it was not passed. The left moved a contrary qualities, pledging that no one would be expelled for past errors, provided he accepted the duration of the present congress". The loft motion received 3,247 votes, the Materal resolution only 1,100, and there were 141 abstractions. This time, it was all over lit was t a.m. The defeated manority left the hall. The next day, Congress elected a Management Committee of twenty-four purply and smooth & Manufacto. The French Communist Party was born, but it was only in May 1927 that it described melf as the Socreon franceise de l'Internationale Communité. SFIC. 19 The new party dismeded to keep 120,000 members (as against 30,000 for the 5 FTO). as well as the party paper, L'Humanusi, but fifry-five deputies out of stry-eacht chose to rement in 'the old firm'

Much of what has been written on the Tours Congress (and on the

PCP) is marved by political games, but two achainsty studies stand mat. The first one, Annie Krome's Aux orseone du communique Prongers, materia that the 1920 spitt was a Transi accident, such as had happened before to the abundy long havery of the labour movement', " but that it acquired a docume againfrance because of the Rosson Balabertha' direct provincions. She adds that pourly all Prench Security had the human nations about the true morney of Delaheven, if many of their supported affiliation to the C1, it was because they rearmed for a change, and unwittingly, they agreed to what the nother calls 'no artificial must'. She finally between that Income French Community linked they fortunes to thour of Seriet Rums, whereas the Susseints refused to do so, the breach opened at Tours became permanent. Assure Krogel is right to stress the supertanes of the Britishevske' mear-entron, but the does not sufficiently show that it streamed from their belief that European revelations were unmodest, so that the rule of exemplers was not us much to perform on "printical graft" but to provide positions to head revolutionaries. Secondly, one may seem series with her that the majority of Franch Sociation and not really understand Bobberrain. (which explains why to many of them eventually left or wore expelled , but it does not eiter the fact that the amergance of Borshevson. whether fully undermood or not, re-encod the debets between reformant and revolutionaries, a debate which, as already suggested, tion by an enterior ever in 1915. Practly, it is not quote right to any that the Roman Revolution gave both to world communium, because d two rather a long-standing revulutionary tradition as well in the instance of revolutionary concennees brought shout by the 1014-10 was which give both to the Russian Revolution and the many Community parties which were created all over the world

The around study, Robert Wohl's French Communion in the making, men the emergence of the PCF (and of the Rosses Communion party is well) as having been due to 'the creat of laboral values that affected all of harape in the years providing the World War', " an accreament, incidentally, with which a Marciet might agree, provided the tent) liberal were replaced by expection. "Wall does not think that the both of the PCF was author as 'societati' or a 'mantgler'. He werest: 'Men authorism make minimishes in the limit of action. Apprenticeship (1921-33)

"A party of a new type"?

It was one thoug to attained to the Committee and quete spother to become in party of a new type" in the Lemmet conce. The PC Fis first therees years were a period of apprenticeship in the application of Lemmas style strategy and taction . According to Linux, Community parties had to be of 'a new type' to demaganh themselves from Seconi-democrate and to most the new attration cannot by 'the peneral gram of expensions. The asympty had to be expressed theoretically (uncompromising acceptance of Marsian), pointcelly (commission) to revolution, to the dictatorship of the projetanet, to testiimperialism and internationalism), socially predominantly working-class membership and obday to lead the moment, organistransity acceptance of democratic contrainin and tuning the party on 'orlis', which Lenin viewed to centres of political education and der-to-day practical activity, and morally (deducation to community) or distinct from caronness. The party formed at Town hardly shall most of their requirements. On the positive side, it started with a good deal of support from straintenacy workers, mustly thou at the "dynamic" industries such as anesiturgy; it had a dody paper, L. Humanute, it enjoyed some prestage among a signaficant number of France's catellectucie, it had ground from within a most party, the 5.F.(O), and was not a poor relation to the labour movement, finally, it was part of a wider incornational movement which included a party in power, the Behbevits, and characters beders such as Louis and Toutsky.

On the debit aids, the last was more impressive. First, there was no idealogical unity, and knowledge of hims: Marxion was include. To remark this intention, regular party achools were started in 1944, and a charestical pourant our founded, the Calorie do Bolchet-terms, to make Calorie do Communicate in 1944. Secondly, the political views of a great many PCF foundation, members were insight-syndicides retain these Laminust. They admired Soviet Russia more for the existence of popular severes than for its use of state protect to creak counter-revolutionaries and to build nocalism. They believed in the Overal Seer (the great social upheaval) rather than in paness pointical work. Thirdly, the PCP's major waskings was that mail 1933-4 it. had manificacut ties with the working class and desployed a potent 'mebility to become an organisation capable of manipulating meato. 1 Many swittest trade uncounts were outside its center, which led Lemm to doclare blunchy in 1923 that "thore is no French Communist Party' He urged two prominent trade unionists, Moninoussess and Semand, so you the PCF to order to change it from within. Both he and Zingerey, the CI leader at the time, streamed the next for moments working-class regregations. In 1925 Meansonment panel the PCF, in 1934 the radwaymen. Streetd, became party moretary, and in 1935 Thorez, who came from a manon family, 2 was made Organisation. Secretary. In apus of this, by 1942 the PCF membership had dwindied to 30,000 (having already gone down from 110,000 in 1921 to 60,000 in 1924), wherein the SFIO's had good up to 136,000 (having already increment from $4,000 m ($21 to $11,000 m $825). To complecate matters, the party was unable to play any role in the CGT until 1946, because the CGT expelled all at 'Red' anditants in 1921, and the latter were forced to set up their own rival centre, the Confoderanon Générale du Trapaul Umtarry, CGTU, in 1922. (The two were re-mused in 1996.) The worst feature was that the PCF's vitrolic actacks on the SFIO between 1930 and 1934, including the hidsermus charge that Socialists were 'nocial-faicusts', considerably reduced Communest credibutes among the workers who had kept faith with nocial-democracy. Fourthly, the PCF's reorganisation on Legislat. lines was slow, and at first, 'the new party retained many of the features and habots of the old one" Apart from the difficulty of transforming 's beneally Jourceston party's into a 'porty of a new type', personal revalues among the leaders and bureaucratic tendenesen did not help matters. Pipally, one cannot say that before 1934 the Environment of PCP presiders were genuine Communities. To a lot of them, communium was not a new way of life, but a dectrine which erygalhood their grambles and frustrepone, and in some cases, a wor of making a political carear.

To all these negative fearures, for which the PCF was either wholly to largely responsible, one thank old the government's persecution of Community, a circumstance which was naturally not of the PCF's own choosing but which greatly added to its difficulties, since it turned it into a complicial organization in the late 1920s. In 1927 the minister, Surrent, Inunched a full-scale outl-communist attack, under the shown of 'Le communicate, posts l'enneme', which led to manerque arrests, flues, and the suggest of the party's dealy mater. A number of Communicat deputies were charged with subversion and had their partiameners amounts labed. In his Memory Ducke recalls that he had to play hade and sock with the police in order to except street, but what he was caught, he was assessed to no loss than there years' proprincement. Luckely for him, a few months later, the Chamber approved the release of all imprisoned deputies by 365 votes to 330. However, this only applied to the second when Parliament was in sersion, so that in 1925, post before the doubletion of the Chamber prior to the General Election, he had to leave the House under cover of darkness. The same applied to other PCF deputies. As for ordinary Communist militages they fixed even worse, more for them there was no question of being covered by purbanisatory immunity, however precursons the letter model by. On 25 December 1929, L'Humanut reported as many as 1,127 cases of prosecution against Communists, address that 507 purty members had been systement to a total of 260 years' pagemenament and over one malbest france at Suits.

However, one should not magnify the PCF's early weaknesses out. of all proportion and anagone that as an apprenticeshap period all that the party managed to do was to bucome as amounted fathe sact. For it was that apparently sanguificant suct which, in 1954, took a major polytical nationive, the invactions of the Popular Front, and from then newards became one of France's major polyment parties. We shall expenses the 1944 terming-point in the next chapter, but at this stage, it is important to note what the PCF did learn during its formative years. First, it learned to mryeys, which was no mean achievement since it was hounded by the sovernment, as we have just even, and openiy attacked by the SPIO and the CGT (The 'velocitets' did occasionally condense the government's 'encureur' is fighting contdisusions, but they claimed at the same time that it was the PCF's behaviour which had brought about the represents in the first place.) The survival trin not only physical, so it were, but political although mether its leaders nor an political mentur, the Commeters, fully undermond the past-way acquesiae sucovery, blundly described in Communist documents as the period of 'stubulanting of capitalism', or the soun-economic roots of sacral-despectacy, or the real importance and mond of the moddle strate (stall constituting the mojority of the population and more enreshed than ever by the prospect of foung their previous savings under a controlled connumy), it did adapt itself to a non-revolutionary attention by trying to fight on all fronts - associally at the workplace, where it set up factory cells, and so the field of foreign policy, where it attacked the government's 'maperalist' plant. Admirtedly, it was not able to become a 'mess party', but to some approcable extent, it did reach the measur, for example, it was active. to broad bodies such as the ARAC (Assectation Republicance det.) Anciens Combattants), the ex-servicemen's organisation founded by Barbuse, and in the not unumportant CGTU, and its duly paper true widely read: in 1909, despite a party membership of $8,000, the readership of L'Humannii was in the runon of 200,000. Finally, the PCF managed to give great new leaders, fully deducated to commun-1600. One of thous, Managor Thorex, became General Secretary® in 1930 and his role is transforming the PCF into a mature political organization is admitted by all observers. His success is sumetimes secrabed to the fact that he was 'above all the man of the apparetus'.? nometance to his intellectual and political qualities. 4 His most hostile biographer, Philippe Robrista, does not deay these qualities, but chann that Therez became a tool of the CFs detente in France. Busene Fried, known to all as 'Clément'. On the other hand, the account of the two men's relationship given by Ceretti * suggests that it was rather a case of acquine partnership.

Comintors guidance: internal life and United Front

Let us now examine the PCF's early years in greater detail. The first crucial issue the new party had so face was the samure of its relationship with the Committee. On this, if was deeply divided, as there were at least three conflicting trends - a pro-Comustern vocal manority (Scoverne, Treat, Vallant-Contacter), an anti-Commeters equally vocal small group, and as usual, a majorsty of centrals (led by Cacha). and Freeward) waverned between a contro-left and a contro-right but all resenting the [attenuational's 'encourse interference', as they now it, in the French party's affairs. The International study tried at first not to intervene too much and too heavily, but it soon felt it had to "purpe (the PCF) of its reformant remnant" (1 Both index treated the more as one of practicle, the PCF majority in the name of 'independesce' and the CI leadership to the same of 'realism'. The former genumely thought they had lettle to learn from others. They felt that having enthusiastically sound a new International, mostly as a protest nesent the old one, they had to be left along to manyout communities in their one way. It is tempering to evaporating with them and to feel that they was saving in the 1900s what the PCF is saving volty. But in factories, the deflorance in greateress many be taken uses exercise and the other sale must be board. Lance and the Commerce felt, first, that the Prench C.P. was not matter enough as vet to stand as an over little and that it gended the guidance of more experiment Communists, full all of these Research, and extendir, that a Karagaina revolution was imminutes and would be libery to occur questionments in a sumble of granteen, in this is one important to co-ordinate the activities of all providencements. They become bear despressed furnity a contrastance of Bureage's revolutionary potential does not necessarily developed his point. Maximum, when the reliefs shouled against 'Matcow', he said than they were substrucing gaugesphy for policies. Of course, he argued, the Commerce a headquarters were in Messow, but where size could they have been at the type? The whole point, he manitennel, was that the man who descred the Community from Mesorw. whether Russian or non-Russian, were not motivated by the atterests al a particular country but by those of the world revolution. The tactics they were know to get adopted were drugged to harrie the providerange, que la provide bapas for a foreign prover as other countries. After Lange's death, his successors adopted the policy of building 'succession in one country', but even they did not meant that foreign Compagnity had to become agents of the Severt state. They extler promoteral the tests of defending the Severt Union as part and percei of the global strategy of strengthening the revolutionary discountable Wheever we may think of States a real autopious, at was bucone by described his currency as "the base of the world revolution" that he was phie to entire the papears of Communication alread. the head of the CI, Bultherm, they repeatedly urged actional parties to display quantitive and they encouraged collective discussions. A drastic change occurved so 1929, however, when the CI lendership tended to make all opposition and when the CPSU's role became unchallengeable. Until 1934, bureaucratic methods and political sectorisation went head in head.

The protracted borde between the PCF and the C1 began in July 1921, when Trotaky, then in charge of French affairs, and later the ECCI to a whole, issued a quasiter of criticisms. These were questly organisational, but very soon the sauce of the United Front (discussed) bulow) added fact to the fire. The PCP's chief mustakes were eard to be poor communication with the CT, lack of political leadership given. by the Management Committee, poor internal life, and letstude investo approximate to publish their own newspapers cuttade party control. (A case in point was Heart Fabre's Tournal do Paralle which openly preached 'tree expression' within the party and rejection of CI 'maerference".) Above all, the ECCI demanded sucressed worksne-class representation and influence. When the first PCF congress met as December 1931, it spent nearly all its time discussing the CFs cryticpage, but at reached no definite conclusions apart from not re-electing. Souvering, the party's delegate at the Committee, to the Management Commuttee. It was a much for the Ci, and as a result, some of an supporters, Loriot, Treast, Dunois and Vaillant-Coutsing, resigned from the MC. A uptit of the magnitude of the Tours uptit seemed ammanent. It was averted thanks to the Commerce's intervention, the ECCI Planam met in February 1922 and got the Franch delegates to pledge that they would put an end to insersection strife and would expel Fabra. Two mouths later. Fabra was still to the party, and the Cl grew impations. Its delegate in France, the Swim ex-clergyman Humbert-Drot, did his best to bring about a compromise between the left and the centre, but he failed, for the centre chose to wage a wer of attrition.

A few days before the second PCF congress was due to open in October, the CI anni Manushky to France, and he proposed, as an improcedented comprutation, that despite the fact that a CP does not allow 'factions', the left and the centre about have equal representation on leading party budges. Buth sides raised countless objections, and Manushky was said by France that the matter would have to be tettled by Congress. Manushky accepted the challenge and addressed the meeting, although he had entered France sliegally and could be ervested of discovered. He did not mance has worth and told delegates. that these party was 'nick' because it had wasted time on trivializies. Two foreign delegator achord how, the German Franz Dolhers, who and that revolutionarity needed describes, and the Englishmen Turn Bell, who binacly told his listeners (in English!) that there was only one Community party and that was in Meacotr. On the last day of the congress, the centre narrowly defeated the left by 1,698 votes to 1,426, and assumed sale leadershap of the party, which led to leftwingers rungings from the M.C. The new Management Committee frankly admirted that the cress had not been resolved. In November 1923 the 4th Commission congress opened. On 1 December it adopted a resolution which included, among other things, Manualsky's earlier proposal for equal representation of left and centry. Although Caclum agrand to abode by the ductions, Fremord refundd. On 1 January 1923. he resigned from the party. Other rebels were exactled. This time, the first round was well and truly over, and the leastestment had wan, for victory was greeted by L'Humanusi (8 Japuary 1923) as the timely "bursting of an abuses" and as the welcome damperarance of people who had 'wanted to make use of the party, not to be of use to it'.

Between 1923 and 1929, despute the cluster co-ordination between the PCF and the CI, clashes were not infraquent. For example, in December 1926, at the 7th ECCI Pleases, Bukharin clashed with Second over his criticism that the PCF was guilty of 'opportunism'. and later, had to tone down his remarks. In January 1927, an article by Humbert-Dros in the Committee source charmes the PCF with poor theoretical work presented Thores to make a strong protest. The French lender further complianced that hading members of the CI (Bukharia, Toplosti, then known as Escoli, and Humbert-Drox) were explosing divisions among PCF leaders. After 1939, it became difficult for and valued CPs to challenge the CPs outhorsty as well as Scales's undergoond leadership. The PCF accepted, not without gaternal debutes unoug at leaders, nearly all the nectarian policies imposed on it, appearally the attacks on the SFLO. It was also because of the Committeen's blandsom that the threat of fracing was quantly under-extension by the PCF and by the whole Communist movement.

A major internal problem faced the PCF as a result of the CFs 1923, victory and was in fact the consequence of that victory. It is known as the same of 'buishevining' the party and it took about two years to complete. The process of 'buishevining' the party and it took about two years to the 4th congress of the Commons in 1924 which accountly estend the phrase and made the task a priority for all its metasse. The sam was retranspotion of buncally most-democratic parties in exact econdence with the behavior of Lenin', but, in it was used, with due "attention being paid". In the concrete carriagonates on each constry'. The last erowing was more analy stated that observed, mannly because Stains's az cashedra interpretation of "Lenin's behasts" often took precedence over when Lenus humself called 'the concrete analyses of concrete conditions". The most important aspects of 'bolshe-Valuetion' were the creation of 'advisory committees' to asset the C.C.in. approximate group, the sorting up of activities' groups (known as Comfrequent 'fractions') at many hadges such as the unions, and shows all, the recurrement that 'cells', especially workplace cells, should become the basic party quats. The PCF belatadly campled with the last decision by going to the extreste of decreeing that all cells abort from rural once had to be factory calls. Although 'arrest calls' were renotreduced by the 1436 Lille congress, the tendency accounted to arrach all members to factory cells. For example, the writer, André Brezan, who seened in 1927 (see below), was manufacted to make a report on 'the Italian intustion' for the ass workers' cell by beaung hencelf enclosively on industrial statistics. He naturally facial. 13

Another sepect of the PCF's external lafe during the period ender review concurrs in periodic 'purges'. Instally, the word 'purge' did not have the nameer connectations it acquired under Stalin, for it supply mount arrang rid of dead wood and disruptive elements. Unfortunately, right from the start, the PCF chose to accompany meanly all experiences with character assessmention and dark husts that the individuals concerned were police epies or paul agents of the boursoome. After the purses of reformatts which occurred entil total. the chief once were these of Trutskyest sympatheses - Souverne. Monotto and Rossor - of 'sarcitable' leaders - first. Treat and Sustance Gerault, then the so-called 'Borbe-Leber group' - and finally of the rehelloon Jacques Doriet. The first three were the victims of the gower struggle between Stalm and Trotally welcas the CPSU and the CT. In fact, it was not the PC F which expelled Souvering, but the Communers. Has reposted applications to be readested were torsed. down, and in the end he "broke violently with Communium" 14 In the case of Monette and Rosmer, the ducaton was taken at Puris, but the reason was the same: support for Trotalry against Stales (1924). As for Albert Trems and Summer Greenlt, their expulsion in 1935 was purtly due to their structures with Zimoviev, then in partial diagrace, but it was chiefly caused by their "imreliability". Treast was indeed a meddler and a blunderer, and his chief class in originality was the description of the United Front Incide as a way of "piucking the Socialist posse" (plumer la volatile socialism), a formula which later chosed the PCF great harm, atthough only Treast had been responsible for it. As for Sumance Germile, she was und to be boosy and was described by Humbert-Drue as 'n second-rate Catherine the Great'. Traint eventually poined the SPIO, but Sumance Germile was readmitted to the PCF in 1913. In 1929, the man who had taken over the party secretariship from Tremt, Louis Selber, was also expelled.

The case of the 'Barbé-Céler group' was a more sersous affair. The label 'group' was applied to them by Thurse as order to suggest that they had executed as a secret faction, but actually they belonged to a transverste (Burbe, Célor, and Heart Lonersy) which was in charge of the party at 1929 bucause most of the other leaders were eather as juil (among them. Thorez and Fraction) or living in hidian to great arrest (unlong them, Durley). Therey's case against them was that they had prevented internal discussion and were following sectamen policies. He did not add that the incremenum was often an actor of the CI's sections are that the group had empyed the Consistern's confidence for a white. The fight began in April 1930, when Thores, discountdang the group's metractions (up offect the party's), decided to per part of his fine as an alternative to staving in sail and resumed his work on the CC, to which he had been elected in 1924. In July the CC supported item against the group and appointed him as sale sucretury. so that he made over from the collective excretarior elected in 1929. (Thorex, Fraction, Barbé and Cetor) In July 1932 he locached a big competer, against the group's policies and methods, and during the menths of August and September, published a series of articles in L'Humanes under semificant titles each es Pas de mannageme done to Parts (No pobots in the Party) and Que les beuches s'austrent (Let people speak out). In many ways, he meant it, if only because without runk-and-file support, he might not have been able to defeat his apponents. Celor was expelled in 1922, Burbé in 1924, whilst Longray remained in the party, having 'honority admitted his errors'.

The burtle which led to Dornet's exposition in 1934 was also long and protracted. It was partly a clash of pursonaistics and partly a clash over policies. Dorset was a proud men who did not take kindly to team work and partly deciples. In his Parisian quantities of Sout-Dans, he had gagaged to build up considerable support for himself tather than the party. He remained Sout Daws' MP in 1936, but the eventually besten by Fernand Greener, a Communical) Politically. Derect advocated the formation of a new party which would be nexther the SF1O 'whose most was one of heteroyal' not the PCF "whose notornous amostence has been fully revealed"  In March 1944. he was savied to Moscow together with Thorez in the hope that the CI could arbitrate between them, but he refused the invitation, and Therez went alone. He was finally expelled at June and the CC charged how with peyron the way to fraction. For ence, this more of character pursuanting that borne out by subarquent events, for Dorset litter founded the tests-faccist Parts Popularie Français, and during the war, he security collaborated with the Name Doriot's expulsion cloud a long chapter of trial and error for the PCF, and no further expulsions mak pince before 1043. This suggests that, for a while at least, the period of strains and strains had come to an and.

1931-33 41

The account of the PCF's internal life would not be complete without a few words about the geven congresses at held since its foundation 14 The first two (1921 and 1922) have already been mentioned, and both were dominated by internal dissensions, which left the membership demonstrated. (Our delegate described the second congress as 'n congress of lunatics'?) The third one (January 1924). marked the Commotern's victory, and especially that of Humbert-Drur, whose shein prevailed at all fields. It also adopted the electoral sionan of Workers and Peasants Bloc (which is discussed below). The fourth congress (January 1925) was important organisationally because it took the document, later described as "heavy", that with the exception of peasants, all members should belong to a factory cell. At the fifth congress. I use 1936; new party rules were adopted and these remained in force until (the, though they were substantially introded in 1937 and in 1944. They included the obligation to work in a party unit for all members, the strem on factory cells, although street cells did get a mention (on paper), the first mention of democratic centralsun, which implied, among other things, the absonce of factions (these had been tegetamized in 1911), the downgrading of the parliatogetary group, which not only had to accept party discipling but was mentioned alongside all other "fractions" in trade unions, cooperative succeives, and the label, and the new functions of the Executive, which was re-easted Central Committee, had to provide polytical loadership, and was expected to elect a Political Surem and a sec-returint from within its runks. The fifth congress was also significant because it was then that Thorax sameted that there was no conflict between patriotism and atternationalism. It was the first time that the PCP, founded by flarce advariants of autiental 'chauvinium', had no clearly claimed its attechment to the land of Prince. The night congress (March-April 1929) revenied that the PCF was far from 'monolistic', as its leadership was split between an 'opportunist' and a 'leftest' (gatecherse) wing. Finally, the neventh congress (March 1932) discussed the effects of the world occupance crims and cautionally began to stress the need for unity with the Socialist workers; but the appeal to the latter was complied with deminisation of their leaders. The Organisation report, presented by Duckes, boasted of a slightly increased membership but complianed that the party's industrial strength in the north and in Paris was not yet matched by its implication in other industrial areas.

In the rest of this chapter we shall examine the PCF's role in Prince's socio-economic life, in her political life, in foreign affairs, and among satellectuals. The first of these is documented by the sauce of the United Front The United Front (co-operation between reforexists and revolutionaries on apacific masses) was Leaun's response to the new seruscion which emersed in Europe and in France after 1921. Hopes of an enumerat revolution began to recede as it was obvious that western capitalism had entered a period of "stabilisation". It is to Legan's and the Commutern's crushr that they perceived the change, but their behel that the new period was transcent and that a new 'revolutionary aituation' would soon return proved to be historically groundless. In France the govelty of the utgatists was not only capitabut "stabilization", but the appreciacl power of the big industrial cartels (of which the most famous was the Counté des Porges, going back to 1964), their links with banking interests, especially the regents of the Bangue de France, and their movemful call for national many against Communists, departed as bandits with a krufe between their seeth. In order to defeat them, a revolutionary party had to isolate them, and to this end, to detach sections of the working class. and most of the middle strete from them. Instead, even when the PCF belatedly began to implement the Commutera United Pront tactic by approaching workers under social-democratic influence, its repeated emphasis on its own independence in relation to "the bourgeome', but, medium and small, fostered the illusion that the ciase strungle in France was a nest buttle between two camps, the bourgeouse and the working class. But this was not really the court the medium and the party bourgeouse were waging their own barries against the bunkers and the Comusé des Parges. Yet all them buttles anded in defeat, partly because the big banks managed to bring down the left-wing governments of the 1920s headed by Herriot, Callinia, Painievé, Péret and Brandt by ouccurraging the expert of capital, which led to the fall of the franc, and partly because minimal workers were advand by the Continuants to domain the right wing Bloc National and the medicane left-wing Cartel des Genehrs with equal contempt.

As the phease 'United Front' was comed by Leain and the CI, we thould began with what it means in Russian. Edwys Front could mean one of three things – a single front, an indivinible whole, and joint action. The English phrase conveys the latter point and does not suggest one partner's exclusive leadership. In French, Front Unique, the more commonly used expression, suspines that exclusive leadership, but Front Uni was also used and it is more akin to the English meaning. It is significant that in 1933, the PCF leadership spoke of a Front Unit when it appealed to the SFIO executive, and also that its entirely new phrase, waste d'action, was used after the 1934 SFIO-PCF part. The fact that terminological versations occurred in response to political developments shows that the same was not one of style alone. Apart from this languatic distinction, a political one concerns the different ways in which the phrase was interpreted by the CI. Until 1926 or so, it implied joint action with 'referencest' workers in well as their leaders, but after 1927, although the name expression was used, Stalan dogmatically decreed that not al-democracy and functions were 'rusus', so that the light against the former took precedence over the light against the latter on the ground that it was impossible to prevent faction without unashing social-democracy first' The United Front their became a series of appeals to runk-and-file SFIO and CGT members over the heads of their leaders and with the chaif aim of 'exposing' these leaders' 'trunchery'. With regard to the tectics demanded by the United Pront, the choice was between usiny 'at the top' (i.e. between leaders) and unity 'from below' (i.e. with the reak-and-filers). The 5th CI congress and that the 'golden rule' was: Unity of the top - never; unity at the top and from below - sometimes.

unity from below - always. Near, but not very may to apply.

The PCF's auxial reaction to the new tactic was bostile. Most of its members were bewildered: What, they exclaimed, we have just broken with the reformats, and now we're expected to bug them like long-lost brothers! In April 1633, the party National Conference resocted the policy by 3,370 votes to 627. It was only after the CI's 1011 victory that the PCF approached the SFIO, but the latter apvarably turned a deaf ear, all the more so cance the Communist appeals were often exceled in offensive longwait. (In 1936, the ECC | criticised the PCF for 'the very your' at had used as its appeal to the $F1O congress.) By 1927, the PCP cortainly applied the Uzmed. Front tectic, but as it had already become associated with attacks on 'social fauciets', it is hardly surprising that the SFIO replied to the Community' shoults in hand. Instead, the Sociabits sought electoral alliances with 'bourgaous' parties, an attitude which was consistent with the Second Interneponal's belief that capitalism was 'nick' and that social-democrate abouid be an 'physicians' 19 Such a benefiopenly expressed, further promoted Communist charges of 'betrayal' But the PCF faded to realize that a number of ordinary workers supported the SPIO because they thought confusedly that a frontal attack upon capatalant was then presenture. They may have been wrong, but this does not excuse the PCF's tactlessnoon in myring so. Admorredly, et called Socialist workers 'class brothers', but it was fond of adding that they were 'des frères aut aut mai tourné' (brothers who turned out badly).

The rare of German fraction gave the stone of the United Front an added uracucy, but outeraribly, the first move sowards working-class unity came from outside the landerships of the SFIO and the PCF. It was the holding of two anternational congresses, one held at Amsterdata in August 1932, and the other in the Plevel Hall in Para to Jude. 1933. (Hence the name 'Amoundam-Playel Movement') In fact, the Amsterdom congress was due to a PCF sustative, for its CC had encouraged Barbunar to launch an appeal assured the war deaper at companetum with other pressument attellectuals. The appeal called for the holding of an interactional anti-war congress and was also again. by Roman Rolland. The PCF officially welcomed the move, but the $FIO expelled those of ste members who strended the meeting. On I December 1932, Thores officially wrote to the SPIO, suggesting 8 fount morting. This time the offer was accepted and a morting took place, but no decisions were taken. On a December, Thores asserted that has party would 'not rest till (it had) achieved the unity of the proletarus' and he demanded. A sangle CGT, a sangle working class . . a single party of the prolessmar. The last point was not very realistic. In the summer of 1983, the Socialist International appealed 'to the world workers', declarate att randoness to discous sount antifascust action with the Committeen. The latter, not having been directly approached, did not reply, but advised an accusos to contact the Socialist parties of their respective countries. The Second Interextracted described that as a 'manocurve'. The three was turning into a trust-comedy, and various CPs (the PCF, the CPGB, and the Caechparty) urged the Committees to start negotiations with its Socialist tival. Their proposals were turned down as 'inexpedient'. At the end of 1913, after defining fraction as 'the dictatorship of the most reactionery, most cheuvinistic and most impenalist elements of finance capital', the ECCI called upon Community to fight for the United Front 'against the will of the trencherous lenders of socialdemocracy. Thus, even at that late hour, it was advocating unity from below instead of both from below and at the top. It was only in 1944. that it changed its time, partly because of events in France.20 and partly under Dispitroy's influence. 23

Before examining the PCF's electoral record, we must bear in mandits appraisal of Parliament at that time. It believed with Lenin that "perlumentarism" was historically obsolete and that it would sook make way for new organs of working-class power, the soviets. In the theantme, still according to Lemm, revolutionaries should stand in electrons in order to expose the resime and make the workers' voice heard. One aspect which most European Communists seem to have then overlooked is that soviets were not set up artificially but gross sponsoneously in the course of three Russian sevolutions as alternatives to the very undemocratic Tearist Dumas. Lenin lumself was not encirely blameless as this respect, not because he expected a mechanical repetition of the Russian experience in the west, but because he urged western workers to est up their own soviets and confidently expected they would do so. 22 It to possible that he might not have claims to this belief if he had not died in 1924, but his successors certainly did, and a number of modern Community feel that they were wrong. For example, Ellegation suggested in 1976 that the early Communist leaders misjudged the situation by mousning that there was such a thing as 'bourgeous democracy', whereas what was open to criticate 'was [ats] use by the bourseower and the bourse set on (atl) 33 Other Community point our in partial mitigation that before function, parliamentary democracy was not just our form of bourgious rule but the only out, so that an attack on 'bourgious rule' was bound to be as attack on parliamentary democracy. Be that or it may, nearly all consemporary Communicate would agree that their producement were right to reject the social-democratic conception of a purely parliamentary road?" and that soday Parliament can be used and 'transformed' became the bourgeouse has so further use for it. "

The first General Electron is which the young PCF took part was held in 1914. Until then, France laid been roled by an-called 'strong men', chiefly the President of the Republic, Millerand (who was no longer a socialist, not even in name). Premier Clamencasis, and his successor unce January 1922, Poincaré. Poincaré's main concern was to strengthen France's position in Burene, and in this way, to kill two both with one stone: on the one hand, to exact hunr repurations from Germany and thus wipe her out as a potential rival, and on the other. to believes the getterned budget by encouraging lease (from big and stooll sevestors) with the promote that 'Germany will pay', But Prance's alies, Britain and the USA, were alarmed at the prospect of sucial unrust leading to revolution in Germany, and they compelled Pomeart to accept the Duwes Plan, which consisted of immediate credits to Gormany so as to make her capable of paying representation later. In order to exploit the discoutest caused by Poincaré's fasture to put Prance's financial house in order, the party of the erban and rural middle change, the Reducals, decided to your with the Socialists in on electoral albance known as the Left Bloc or Carsel des Gauches.

For its part, the PCF advocated the formation of another 'bloc', the Workers and Pennars Bioc, which the SFIO was savited to join. The proposed programme included short-norm demands (e.g. strict application of the law on the eight-hour day) as well as long-term goals, chiefly the schievement of the dictatorship of the projetariat Interestingly, this implied that weckers' raise could be achieved without a violent revolution, but this was neither spelt out nor discussed at the time. The SFIO related to be drawn and preferred alliance with the Radicals in a 'Left Bloc'. The 1924 electrons were held under the action of arrepresentation. In The PCF stood is all departments for three. It polled $75,872 votes and obtained receive, in the north and in a number of rural centres. Although it was an encouraging start for a newcomer, other most note that many SPIO waters remained faithful to is used to meason. The PCP's first electoral context revealed that the party's chamble came mostly from multant industrial workers and from discontinued presents.

Einstoral victory went to the Left Bloc of Radicals and Socialists, and Herriot, a Radical, formed the poverament, but without SFIO participation. A year later, he reagand because he had been defeated in the Senate, the French Upper House, over his financial policies. It After a succession of five governments in ten months, the right-winger, Poincart, formed a government of 'national unity' (July 1926). He was greeted demarkely by Caclus with the comment, 'You're only seen in times of mintertune'. The PCF's fight against the new government was a mixture of verbal violence, both in Parliament and outside, and ineffectiveness, as public opinion had been reasoured by the return of a cautious stationism who was going to 'save the france'.

In the 1908 General Election, the PCF found itself at a double disadvantage, first because it had been instructed by the Cominteen to apply the 'clear against clear' tector, and accountly, bucount the new electoral issueworked assume at. The son of the Committee texture was to context all electrons on a strictly 'class basis', i.e. that 'workers' candidates' abouid stand against 'bourgeon candidates'. In France, this meant PCF-SFIO alliance only if the latter agreed to sever all relations with "bourseon parties" in the name of 'class solidarsty'. which it predictably refused to do. Moreover, with a two-ballot election, the tactic appelved the refusel of the PCF to stand down in the second round and its appeal to the electorate to observe class discipline' metaod of traditional 'republican discipline'. Although the policy channel to be unsurprachably orthodox by substituting a strict division between explosters and exploited for the traditional division between right and left, it was a cariculary of Marximi became it staured existing resistant and because it neclected, except in words. the need for allegons. It was bound to lead, as indeed it did, to the PCF's uplended isolation. The party leadership was despity divided. over it, with Thorex being wholly in favour, Doriot and Rappopurt egaster, and others setting on the fence. At the 11 January 1928 CC meeting, the tactic was adopted by twenty-three votes to therees. As for the electoral law, it had just been passed with the overtuncestion of teducing Communicat influence. It was known as the several districtdecoment à deux sour and it est up the new familier two-bullet. protons, s.e. a second round of no condidate records as absolute thintsity at the first ballot. On the government's behalf, Sarraut frankly admitted that with PR, the PCF might obtain severity or eighty mins, which would be 'disastrous'. Whether his forecast was accurate or not, the PCF, with over 1 million votes at the first ballot, got only fourteen must, wherein the right-wing Union Republicants Démocratique, with roughly the mine number of votes, ended up with 143 seem. The PCF claimed that such figures could not metal great faith in the fairment of 'buttergrous democracy'.

The first round of the electrons gave the PCF a net gate of 200,000 votes by comparison with 1924. This, however, was not a vandection of the 'class against class' specie because many party members simply fisied to eoply it. Moreover, at the first ballot, no meade Communist. not an absolute spacenty, and according to Humbert-Drott, Stales was horrafied and said it was totally unacceptable that there should be an Community in the French Chamber. At an emergency meeting of the ECCI, he argued in favour of electoral agreements between the PCF and the SF1O in Paris and the north, but Humbert-Drog fought against his proposal. In the end, a compromise was reached, advising a deal with the SFIO in about ten constituencies. Both the PCF leadership and the membership were utterly confused, but the SFIO position was equally confused. As a result, both parties lost seas. among the fourteen PCF deputies, there was Ducios, who best Blum, but not Thorez, and some fifty Socialists were not re-elected. It is difficult to ascertain the process extent of Communist losses between the two ballots because the party's tactics were not uniform. Some histories suggest a drop of one half, others of one third. 14 What is beyond doubt is that the drop was substantial. The purty's strongholds were Paris, the industrial morth, the Lot and Garonne area, and the contre-west. The electrons were wen by the centre-right coalition, the Umon Nanonale, and Poincaré formed a government, with Radical participation. The PCF's egiposition to it continued to be vocal but meffectual. For its part, the government intensified its represent of community, and Thorez was out of the many landers. arrested. In July 1939 Poincaré rengard and was succeeded by shortlived governments headed by Brand, Tardieu, Stong, Chautemps and Lavel. Whatever their party labels, there was lettle difference between one Prime Musuater and another, and it was not grounly inaccurate for the PCF to lump them all in the same bourgoon bag. However, this blanker condemnation also revealed the party's mahabity to have say ruel amenet on political developments. As a competention, it decided to stop up working-class arruggles on the economic front, and at its prepare (Merch 1932), it described the organisation of these arruggles as 'the proparation of the counter-offensive of the working class'

In October 1939 the Wall Street crash unhered in a period of economic and noistical crims in the western world, but in we shall see in the next chapter, France was not immediately affected, so that the General Election of May 1932 was held under the dismon that the country was lucky to have excaped the worst effects of the shame. Thus, however, did not halo the rulest purtue very much because France's comparative presperity, even if more apparent than real, had encouraged the being that the left should be given another chance. As a result, the Carari was returned to power, and once again, Herriot became Prime Manuter, A Socialist, Paul Bencour, sound the government, against the party's wishes, and later became Prime Magazor basself, after Hurriet had lost purbassentary and popular support for having saled the Chamber to authorize payment of an testalment of France's debt to the USA, in scate of the fact that since June 1931 Germany had ceased to pay any reparations. Boncour was againstly anable to unive Prance's functional problems, and the pattern of short-lived governments contained unabated: between Impury 1912 and May 1934, there were seven different governments, headed by Duladier, Secrent, Chesterres, Duladier agass, Donnergue, Level.

To return to the 1942 General Election, the PCF was still committed to the 'class against close' tacter, but the rise of Hathe in Gormany, the first effects of the cruse in France, and the undeputed leadership. of Theres made the party all contributed to soften the tector considerably. For example, well before the parliamentary electrons were due, on August 1931. Thorex had announced that the PCF would sock assuments with SFIO sections on second ballot withdrawah in all elections. The Socialist paper, La Populaire, declared that 'Mancow' had finally resisced at own stapacity, but added that there was nothing doing. 'We shall never ask saything from the Bolsheviks,' it wrote in its 4 September 1011 insue, 'we'll kick their teath in ' A few days later. Poul Foure, referring to the Open Letter to Socialist. Workers which contained Thorex's propussis, stated somewhat radely. 'It would be an moult to Socialist workers to smagine that their typly would connet of anything over a five-letter word. (An allumon to the word Marde, which is often euphemistically referred to as a five-later word.) Undeterred, Thores oversed in the 26 September instaof L'Humanuté: 'The workers in your party do not think like you. Monager Paul Foore 'It was not quote untrue, because the response of some Sociation workers had not been housile. In the cantonal elections which preceded the perhamentary once, the main winners were the Radicula and the Socialists. The PCF made a few gains in the north, but nearly everywhere else at lost votes. The General Electron results were even wome. Although the right-wine was busten by the Radicals and the Socialists, Communists fured very badly, losing 280,000 votes, their percentage of the poll being only $.4 per cent. (It Was 11.35 per cent in 1928 and 9.3 per cent in 1924.) The CC blamed it all on the 'Barbé-Célor group' (a convenient scapegost), on the electoral law, and on the government's crude attempt to charge French Communists with complicity as the just-commuted assuminarms of President Donmer by a Russian émieré, Gorsuloy, The Compagern's secretions and so harmful effects on the PCF were not sment roped.

"Anti-lassociation"

In accordance with 'Lenin's beheats', the PCF took up on 'antiimperialist' stand in foreign policy. It was probably the only area where it behaved as a Lemmat purty. For Lemm had strongly asserted. that one of the key features of parties 'of a new type' was their refusal to support their own governments in their arrapple against 'imperialist rivals' and against the national-liberation movements in the colonies. The first time the PCP was not to the test was when it was barely two vests old and came out assess Posscaré's decision to occupy the Rubr. in 1903. A number of prominent Communists were arrested for having arrended an international conference in Bisen at which an appeal was usused calling upon workers to regard German and French. capitalism as their 'common enemy'. Cachin's perlamontary immunity was lafted. But Peancart's colicy was anouqular and was attacked by Radsculs and Socialists, so that in the end, in the face of opposition from France's albes, he washdrew the troops. The PCF chalked this MP OF E VICTORY.

Two years later, French Community opposed the government's war on the Raffan nationalists in Morocco, led by Abdel Kriss. The PCF sent Abdel Kriss a telegram pledging support, and to match at words with doods, it set up on Action Committee against the war under the presidency of Thosez, and staged a twenty-four-hour protest strake on 23 October 1925. The party classed that it was followed by 900,000 workers, but it conceded that the figure might have been higher if it had not measured on acceptance of all its demands, aspacially that of first independence for the colours. At Putesuz, one of the demonstrators was shot dead by the poince, and there were many arrors, including that of Duriot. Though was tentenced to feartoon meaths' impresentest and had to so into hiding

A third instance of the Pt. Ps 'proletaries internationalism' was its solidarity with the Sovier Union and its cutopage against anti-Soviet wer plans. Solidarity with 'the first land of sacialism' was of course a marter of principle for all Community. The PCF in particular blandly smallowed the whole of Sover propagately, ever-emphanog the achievements and refumer to acknowledge the existence of dark putches. But anti-Soviet propagands was aqually one-inded; the mendacested were sold that the Botshevska were monsters and the more tophisticated that the Soviet system was on the verge of colleges. As for the 'war plane' which were ead to be made by western governmenus, they were described by the PCF as memeusing from the 'fury' of bourgeous polarization at the thought of the USSR's audustrial and surroultwest 'successor'. On a August 1929, choose by the Comustorn. as on international action deviagation the threat of easi-Severt wer, the French starty tried to stage a big demonstration, it was not very successful, mosply because the government had greated many Commuseum in a "preventive measure" and because large detachments of police were called in to deal with trouble-makers.

On the Alaszan queezan, the PCF suggested astenomy for the region on the ground that the papelistion had its own dislect and culture and was neither French nor German. But the party was losen to stress that its stand was not anti-French, and so April 1933 Thomse told Parliament. 'We, predetarance, love France, but we do not love her in the same way as the bourgeon. We are proud of the Revolution, we are proud of the Commune, but we block with shome when we think of the approximan which Alasza is undergoing.' Gérard Walter clastic that is making such a statement, the first of many is that vent, Thomse was not following Communes directives, but merely 'his own inspiration',' and he adds that Directive's advice to all Countriusions that they should be putrated as well as revolutionaries was not given before August 2935. Be that as it may, it is a fact that to this day the PCF has metaded parasition as one of its main features, and at times, it has been charged by ultra-left critics with 'patronishing'

The PCF and intellectuals: pacifiets, surregion

During the period under review, the PCP's relations with intelfectuals were a maxture of harmony and tension. Although it was in the lose past-war period (the 1970s) that intellectuals were drawn towards the party on masse rather than as individuals. 16 the PCP's appeal to the intelligences has always been one of its most original characteristics. No other Prench party can clean to have included in its make to many writers, artists and economics, but in 1960, Aconomconfided to an interviewer that in order to join the PCP in the 1900s and what is more, in order to remain a manifer of it - one had to be 'n little med". There is much truth in this facutions mily, and it constatutes a createness of both the purit's narrow-manded 'workeriem'?) and of the political inemperence of left-wine intellectuals. When the PCF was founded, the satellocrash it attracted were those who had hast experienced the horsors of the first world war and who saw in communion the only way out of 'barbarram'. Not all of them sound itemschately, some at fact always remained aloof, but 'the party of peace', as the PCF appeared to many, stood out as an inspiration to them. Aragon and Breson, two young poets in 1921, and not yet the founders of the surregist movement, had been so moved by Chris Zetkin's appearance at the Tours Congress, which to them symbolined Franco-Garman brotherhood on a new basis, that they tried to som the new party. As it happened, they were put off by the valgarity. of the official who received them, and it was not uptil 1927 that they took the pluma.

If the future surrealists were not yet ready for the party, others were, especially Berbusse and Poul Vadinat-Courtures. The former, at first a pacifist, founded in en-survicemen's association, the ARAC, with political same. It had the blessing of Romain Rolland and Ametolic Prince. 13 He also founded the process, Clariti, which was pacifist and tests-establishment, and in 1923, he joined the PCF. He eventually left Clariti, as he found most of the contributors son narrow in their outlook, has he continued to be the party's main spokesman on cultural motters, although he was regarded with suspicion by some Marxiets for his allegedly exocurve interest in Jesus, whom he protested in a great revolutionary. From 1932 onwards, he helped, together with Romain Rolland, to build the anti-facciat Ameterdam-Pleyel Movement. He deed in 1935 and large crowde attended his functed. As for Clariti, it was unsuccessful to culturing the surrealists' support in 1926, and in 1926, it was taken over by Navalle, a Trots-

Rysti, and changed its many to La Latte des Classes. "Vaillam-Courtrept began to political career by taking up an auto-minuration stand made the SFIO, although he took part in the fighting and was menutated to despetches no fewer than seven times. At the Toure Congress, as we have turn, he was one of the pro-offshation speakers and was elected to the party executive, a position he hapt until his death in 1937. His strong personality deeply affocued many of his comradus, sacioding Aragon and Gobriel Piet, the latter paid him tribute just before he was abot by the Nazio in 1943.

The next group of intellectuals to som the PCF were the surreshets. Surrestam was founded in 1922 and was an offshoot of 'Dods', a trend, instacted a few years earlier by Treaten Tzers, which advecated the resection of one and every value. Surrenling wanted to go beyond this purely negative revolt, and it set itself the aim of discoverant a resisty which was higher (to sur-readits) then that which is apprehended in everyday life. It was the resisty avoided by drawing and the sub-concurse. This had little to do with the class struggle and the dictatorship of the profetariot, but it was a rejection of "bourgoust thinking. As the PCF was the anti-bourgaous party per ancellance, there record to be a community of outlook between the two movemeans. Used 1924, the two manned each other, mannly because the encreasure were not greatly suspensed as pointers. The test of building vocations on distinct from that of american the old world, mostly or words, seemed see dulf to be taken personally. Aragon even described the Remain Revolution to 's vague manufactal center and quote of 'Mesceu in elemes' (doddering Moscow). In test, however, the PCF's pre-Abdel Kram mead fired the surreshets' emergestron and they drew closer to the one party which had not passed so the passent "hymers" assure the Reffee engageshets. The change of the reparticlement came in 1927, when Breion applied for membership of the PCF, and was followed by four of his collegues. Aragon (who remained a member), Poul Eleard, Perry Unik and Benjamin Piret. Their party membership did not substructually change their outlook or singrove their relations with Barbussa, unfairly regarded as a party back. Very sons, they climbed with the PCP leadership. The main bour of contention was that their concention of an artist's role was at variance with the party's. They did not merely demand absumes of burnous ratio control as the interacy field, but the right to interpret Margion in their own way, and if need be, to bring it into line with Freedom and other medern trends. The party replied that Marxielli was the collective responsibility of all Communics, and furthermore, that there was no Change Wall between art and politics.

The whole debate might have been conducted in a vigorous but friendly support had not each of the participants displayed stubborn novilinamen to most the other half way. The sucreshets usually refound to ducum aeathetic matters with "incomprises" polyticanis. whereas the PCF leaders halowed arrogantly and felt deep down that these 'some of the rich' had to be taken down a pag or two. The documen to proge them all to factory cells did not help. A few manchs after somme, most of the sucrement severed all connections with the PCF * In 1930, they changed the name of their journal from La Révolution Surviolesse to La Surviolesses qui survica de la Révolufrom end stated that if impressions declared war on Soviet Russia, their position would 'emform to the directives of the Third International and to the punction of the French Communit Party. The same some of the review, however, carnod an article by Breton on Mayakovsky's suicide which attached Barbusse, resected the possibility of a "proletarum art', and channed that supporting the working class and liberating the human mend were both accounty but represented 'two distinct drames'. Matters came to a head over the so-called Azason. Affair, which exploded in 1942 and was marked off by the publication m 1012 of a neam, Front Rouse, in which Arason provocatively called upon workers to 'upon fire' on their enemies, including 'the performing bears of encod-democracy. The author was charged with 'acceptant to marker' and he faced prosecution. The surrealists defended him on the ground that 'open fire' was a poetic metaphor and that one should not save 'local menufactors to a postic work'. Aragon rejected this land of defence and was supported by the party. When Resson tried to charify merture and to wandcase his stand in a brochere entitled Mesere de la puesse (by analogy with Mars's Missre de la philosophie), the members of the newly-founded French section of the international Union of Revolutionary Witters (Arring). hamself, Georges Sadoul, Lun Bunnel, Pierre Unit, and Maxime Alexandre) described the book as 'incompatible with the class strucgle and consequently as objectively country-revolutionary. Once the label counter-revolutionary' had been used in the party press, it was abvious that the surrestats had become enemon of the PCF. One may note that Aragon was not charged in the end, and furthermore, that Eluard enoused the party during the second world war and died a Communent of 1942

Pinally, two other groups of intellectuals deserve a livel mention. One was made up of philosophers and included Georges Politics, Paul Nissa, Henri Lefebvre, Pierre Morhange, Norbert Gutermut and Georges Frantisann. ¹⁸ In their case, two, it was the PCP's mand during the war against Abdel Krim which irregarded off their interest in the party and eventually led to their joining it in 1927. In 1929 they founded the Revus Marxista. The other group was made up of trackers, and one of their members was Georges Cognot, who later became a leading PCF and Committees official. He joined in 1921 and died in 1978.

The most detailed study of the PCF's early period (up to the med-1920s) is Robert Wohl's. It ends on a critical note, after saying that the party's appeal rested on the fact that the French worker was then " . . . a leper who could neather surmount nor destroy the walls that hemmed ham in. Hence his succeptibility to Communist appeals'. he odds that this explains * . . . why the effect of Communion on French antennal life has been as unfailingly seactmeary. Instead of breaking through walls of non-communication that separated Franchesen, Communium debberately out out to reminrot them. 14 This calls for a few comments. First, the 'shetto' in which the French working class found stielf should not be averstressed, and one need enly bore in mind that the PCF lost its initial appeal, partly because many workers eamply did not feel that they had 'nothing to lose but their chains' in a communist seveletion. Secondly, it is true that the young PCF was often sectamen, so has been nounted out shove, but it as comewhat arrange to charge at with finding to break through "the walls of non-communication that separated Frenchmen' for this is transmount to accoming it of being Margari'll it is an expost of Markett polytical faith that, whether we lake it or not, there is a sold under capitalism anyway, the spin between the 'exploners' (and their supparters, and the 'explored'. The PCF may have often presented the told in an unconscruming way and it may have under-estimated the differences both emong the working class and the non-exploiting population, but it would not have been faithful to its doctrine had it not mond for the working closs and against the bourgeoine. Moreever, as we shall see in the next chapter, the PCF eventually reshald that at order to defeat its 'class enemy', at had to build broad popular timity agranut it, but admircudly, this realisation came after the period covered by Wohl. Discounse the letter's assessment, Treraky writes. 'A critic of such a point of view muchs well sak how the Communist.

actions of 1936-37 and 1944-46 periods of great rocal referm and the duly periods when the PCF was associated with the national government – fit apto such an argument. 157

The chief difficulties encountered by the PCF patil 1933 were partly of its own making (and the Committeen's) and partly beyond its control. Its uncretical support of the USSR and Stalin led the majoraty of arm-Communicate not only to regard it is a Yorean party', but to assume that the faults and languages of the Sovier Union were caused. by anciches, study rather by the errors of its followers. In addition, the problem of working out a strategy for the seamediate present as well as for the distant feature was not solved, with the result that the PCP's impact on French netsonal life was not so much 'reactionary', as Wohl asserm, but very institud. What its enemies were fond of calling 'the Communist threat' was more potential than real. The external circumstances which hampered the PCF more than anything clarwere the SFIO's and the government's housisty. Before 1934, the Somehats refused the dightest co-operation with the Communists of it did not savolve the public admission that the choice made at Tours had been magnified. As for the apperments, we have already seen that its represente measures against companion made to effect that the PCFs apprenticeship period was also a period of semiclandestine existence. In the early 1930s, the prospects for the party were gloomy. It needed a new strategy to reverse this negative trend. The new strategy, known as the building of a Popular Frunt, was first hunched in 1934, and this year marks the end of the PCF's propresticeship period. We shall examine it in the next chapter.

At this stage, it is worth giving a general view of the party's subsequent history, of an gradual 'coming of age'. The process west through four stages: the first sign of maturity was the Popular Front instintive (cf. Chapter 3), at was followed by the Communistr' role in the war and the liberation, leading to their first ever government participation (cf. Chapters 4 and 5); thirdly, after a marking time period (cf. Chapter 5), the PC F began, slowly and gradually, to work out an independent strongy (cf. Chapters 6 and 7), finally, the party cause of age in relation to the internacional Communist movement (cf. Chapter 8) and passed from opposition to its second government participation (cf. Chapter 9).

Maturity: the Popular Front (1934-8)

Origina and nature of the Popular Front

The Popular Front straingy was maget as the left's response to the reason as world accounts; cross and to the reason future threst. The world creas, which became with the dramatic 1909 Wall Street creek, affected France lover than most other countries, because between tor a and topic she had busines a money lunding state rather than atadvenced undustrial state, to that both has bathers and her industrialinto country of these operating small and mechanical flavorating firms): had the considerable alterior they were preserted agrange the upo and downs of the processes and market. The diverse was usen showered, and when the cross came, it came with a vergenees, betting nearly all earthing of spearty. First, the French banks were made to realise that the franc fell because it was depopulant on the devalued pound storiato, soul cloudy lasked to the American dollar. Then, French foreign. trade, depending on the sale of hurnry trems, began to declare Penally, production full by about so per cent between 1928 and 1934. This, however, does not grows that all capitalists suffered a loss on profes, for our most dissinguish between the sheherod' and 'unsheltions' systems. The foreign excluded greate statisticities as well as buy trusts in engineering, chemicals, you and steel, cost, shipfinishing and organ refinery. Because of their monopoly position, their proceetive tariffs, and the presence they were chie to exert on green means, these firms made profes to space of the cross. Tearther with the remote of the Book of Proper telescrated by the left as 'the two has deed families of they explainted the cross to us easing the concentrathis of wealth and power two those bands. The non-cholored sector thelisted smaller grow and steel concurse, shape, bords, the luxury goods, worther, textile and oth industries, cost-making, motor industrios, and business banks. This unpresected sector, no longer able to destraints against foreign steak risch as Japan who were arthres the terms granda grane chample, uncorred a connetrophyc fall or pitalita, anipotional in the reman of 60 per cout.

In address, the whole working population millored from the cruin

60 Maturity

First, the industrial workers (on guillon out of a total working popubition of twenty-one millions faced drawn; wage reductions (between 34 and 30 per cent) and many unemployment. from 2 50,000 in 1931 to half a mallion up 1935, a fluttry which does not include the mallion or an who were not entailed to unemployment benefits and thus were not registered as jobiese). Secondly, the five to us mailton were-corners. such as clement workers ($00,000), domestic services (700,000) and the like also had their total incumes greatly reduced. Thirdly, there was the rural population (about half the sotal). It included poorly-paid terroultural proleterane and persents owners a small plot of land whose conditions were appalling because of taxos, high prices, debts, and the middlemen who pocketed most of their cases. The crisis made matters worse, aspecially as pursuits produced more grain than they could sell at reasonable prices. Finally, the urban middle clames (aboptospers, small traders, and professional people such as doctors, barratters and the like) were hat became of husber prices, idealwrity, and the full in value of their modest shares.

According to the PCF, the crims was a heaven-sent opportunity for fractor demagagnes, to whom the 'two bundred families' were sure to turn, rest so their like had done in Italy and Garmany. The med to build a broad popular alterace against the fractit threat was therefore at the heart of the Popular Front policy. In order to evolve such a policy, the PCF needed to understand the asters of faccion and to reappraise its own past policies. The understanding of forcion was provided by the Committee, although a came very late. (In the case of Germany, it came too late) Despute the manguaded emphasis on the fight against accord-dissocracy, with the result that the European working class removed divided,2 the CI was swere that fraction represented 'the terroratic dictatorship of big capital', as its 1928 programme put it. A more precise definition was given by the 1911. tigth ECCI Plenum, and it became the classic Communist analysis of factors over since; the latter was no longer and to be the dictatorship. of 'big capital' in general, but of 'the most reactionary, most chauvagence and most expension elements of fanance capital', then implying that other sections of the cumtaket class could be drawn into the strangle assume at. The Plenom also noted that the 'mass basis' of forcinit was the putty bourgrouse and 'the declared elements in the but critical and that its demandanc appeals could even find a responsiamone the working class.

The analysis of function was not that of Social-democrats, who, initially at any rate, were deceived by the middle-class character of the movement and pumbly by the fact that, at first, Garman franciers had backed the low extreme untionalist groups rather than the Name. However, the example of Italy should have opened their even, for Museolass had also started in the self-proclasmed champion of the petty bourgeouse and had anded up as the evotage of bur business. which new in his 'corporate mate' the ideal way of destroying working-class and democratic opposition. Equally revealing was the muempt by buth German and Italian forcists to describe all workingclass organisations. Succession purches, trade topopo etc., as "Marxant" and 'dengarous'. In France, the SFIO had become so 'constitutional' in its approach that it really believed that constitutional means about traid defeat factors, and when in 1912 Hitler lost two milion votes. Blum confidently forecast that the read to gower was now 'closed to National-Socialism and that 'German Social-democracy (had) got the better of Hutler'. A manority of French Socialists, such as Marquet. and Dist, even classed that fraction had shown the revolutionary potential of the studdle classes and proved that "the faccust read" could lead to socialism. Marguet and Disc were eventually expelled and they ended up as collaborators during the war. They importance should not be overstressed, but they show to what lengths ideological disarray had some in the Socialist Party. No wunder that Blum declared hannelf 'terrified' when he heard Marquet at the party congress.

No such disarray occurred in the PCF. There, the morable had not been our of manuaderstanding the true nature of factors, but of soung ugus of 'forcestou' in social-democracy, a mentake which engaged up the Communers. It became to be corrected in 1945, but not without blunders and contradictory mances. In 1934, and still more in the years that followed, attacks on social-democracy were increasingly replaced by the impassioned denunciation of fraction. Moreover, the PCF took at upon street to explain that Hitler's ambitions included the destruction of France, described in Main Komal to Germony's 'heredstary enemy'. Therer was use of the few Franch political leadery who had actually read Hitler's book and had taken at seriously. He and his piery were able to show that the fascast threat was not merely interned but experted as well, and that the fight against fourism was also a fight assess the war danger, war being encented to the Nati economy. It is customery to see to this last aspect an echo of Soviet preoccupations about New Germany's openly 'auti-Bolchitvik' policy and to conclude that Prench Communists were more concerned about Russia's security than France's. We shall presently secure to the USSR's role at the Popular Front strategy, but in the monature, we may agree with Professor Cobban that it is 'rarely possible to my of a switch in the policy of any Communium purry how for it was the result of a directive from Moscow, or how for the local party may have taken the instantive'.

The responsed of past PCF policy and thinking concurred five main areas. Pirst, the need to sevire the United Front with the Socialists and cases all attacks on the SFIO. This west beyond Lenan's broad concepting of the United Front, for as Thorax forcefully put it at the party's national conference in I was 1944, it had to be achieved 'at all cases'. Even if Communists remained convinced that Social-democrats preferred the managing of capatalism to its deservetion, the nevel point they made was that 'greature from below' could bring about a change of policy, if not a change of hourt, and that the $F10 leadership could hardly report the pressure, mace the aim was not revolution but urgent reforms. One may note that to this day this has remained the PCP's approach to its rival. Secondly, it was personery to re-examine the role of the studdle classes. Long before, Marx had dissinated in 'nonceme' the view put forward in the 1875. Goths Programme that the middle classes formed 'one reactionary mass', and Leng after how had stressed the possibility of wanting them ever But apart from the fact that past PCF practice of emphasizing Communica 'independence' in relation to 'the bourgeome' as a whole constituted a drawback, the intestion is the 1930s was entirely new in an much as it was not a question of alleying the perty bourgeome's fours of revolution, but of sevolving it in a democratic struggle assume fascism. They was deemed resisting backing factors was against its accommic interests since it represented. the domination of big business, moreover, it was deemed indispensable butmass otherwise, the forcists might enjoy its support on the bests of their alogans against the 'plutocracy'. The PCF's national conference in 1934 declared unembiguously 'Without the middle classes we cannot best forcess."

The third was was the reappraisal of 'bourgeons democracy'. The new Contenuates approach connected in saying that 'soviet democracy' was superior to 'bourgeons democracy', but that the latter was better than no democracy at all, which was just what would happen under faccions. The PCF resected the faccion appared stopen, 'Exther facc-

arm or communium, and replaced it with 'Either fancium or democracy' To quote again from the 1934 conference, whilst exposing the 'dependention of bourgeon democracy which poves the way for finction', Community 'defend and will defend all the democratic frot-dome won by the masses themselves'. Museolini's boast that his movement was 'the autobens of the masserial 1789 principles' provided the PCF with a golden opportunity of usuing the counter-boast that it was the 'hear of the Jacobase' and to stress through Thores' 'Well, it must us, Communit proletarions, some of the people of France... that the question be put in that way. DEMOCRACY OR FASCISM.'*

Fourthly, the unp-fascal strategy sequired a new approach to patriotzen. It had long been customary in the Communist movement to quote the factors Communica Manufesto saving. The workers have no country', and to forget that Marz and Banels no on to say 'We cannot take from them what they have not got. Since the proleterist. . Thus constitute stielf the nation, it is stielf national, though not in the bourgeon sense of the word." The PCF restored the statement in full and added that the modern bourgeouse had lost all claums to be patriotic since it put its class interests before the nation's. The party's fevourite sloges in the Popular Front period was 'For a free, strong and hopey Peaner'. The most spectacolor expression of the new approach was what came to be known as the 'reconcilation between the Marseillasse and the Internamenals' Recalling that the former had been written for a fighting bourgeomic and the people, unned against feudal Europe, French Communists claimed that it belonged to the working masses rather than to a move bourgeous establishment. and they called on their supportion to sing both revolutionary enthants. (which is inversibly the case at PCF public meetings today). It was time, they mad, that the people should 'regain their own Maraesilosse". More amountantly, as a radio speech made in April 1936. Thorex asserted that 'It is neither in Rome nor in Berlin, par in any forward capital, not even in Moscow, to which we Communists do not hide our deep attachment, that the fate of our people will be decided. at in Paris'. At home, the party's new strage savelyed a changed attitude towards the family and concern for france's fallian barthrate in foreign afform, the PCF welcomed the 1935 Franco-Soviet pact and endorsed the fund communique second after the States-Lavel. talks, especially the following seasonce: "Mr. Statio understands and fully approves of the policy of national defence pursued by Prance. . . 'When one recalls the better destancestion of 'astronal defence' at the Tours congress and since, one can imagine that such a statement might have proved emberraring. In fact, Laval, who was then Poreign Affairs minister, had hoped he would be able to attack the PCP on eaching less than Sucha's eacherup. But the party covered the walls of Paris with posters asying 'Stalin is right' (at could hardly have read that he was wrong!) and proceeded to explain that national defence against a would-be fascint aggressor could and should be supported by the working class become it was vitally interested in housing France from foreign fascints.

Finally, in order to broaden the anti-facent alkance, the PCF appealed to the Catholics. In doune so, at had to break not with its puridocurate but with a strong auti-clerical tradition in France Marriet. meteralism is not east-Christian; it is rather a philosophy which claims that the root of all religious is unlappagein on circle faced with poverty and serecurity, many people such consfort in a heavenly father. The task of revolutionerses is to make this form of 'escape' transcensory - by building a better world. There is no reason why behaven should not contribute to this task, is it does not involve the giving up of their fach but samply the wall to end social squarter. In 1905. Lessas and that unity to build 'paradise on carth' mattered more than drysnoos of opunou about 'puradure in howes'. In adopting a broad policy towards Christians, all the PCF had to do was to apply the teachmen of its masters. However, it was not as sensele as that, for the most of latests (a secular state, reposite from the Church) had long been a bone of commonon burwess French Carbohas and the left. The PCF secreted that a secular state was not upon facto an anti-religious state, but one which toterated all religious without officially supportime any. It further added that Christians should not be taken in by the faccasts' class, that Christian values would fare better under their rule - how could retracted and sorrors he called Christian values? The party's new approach came to be known as in politique de le main tendue (the policy of the ountretched hand) because it was troughraced by the following statement in Therer's 1016 speech. 'We hold out our hand to you. Catholic (now as sendons to main, catholisms). Worker, office worker, craftsman, persons, we whose outlook a corehir, because you are our brother, and because you are like us burdened with the more cares." A few weeks later, the Consequent lander repeated his appeal, myons that believers and unbelievers should keep their respective varies but 'moste in the common structile for the good of our people and our country'.

A PCF initiative?

We must now emmane the PCPs role in Lounching the new strategy. That the Popular Front was a Community materizes in admitted by everyone, but opinious vary as to whether it was the PCF steelf or the Soviet government, was the Commercia, which was responsible for putting it forward in the first place. In order to avoid confusion, one must during such hereese the two stages of the policy - the United Front with Socialists, i.e. working-class unity, and the extension of the albance to the fluckcale, i.e. unity between the working class and the moddle classes, which is the Popular Frant group? With regard to the first mane, it means remainably clear that it was decided by the Commetern as a whole, after about these years of hested discussions. both atomic Cf lenders and the lenders of various autional parties. On the CI's aide, Denstroy, Manushky and Kussiana were as favour of the new approach, white Belo Kno. Proposity and Lessysky apole amount it. On the PCP's sale, Thorex suvered for a while but eventually became the champion of 'unity at all costs' whilst Marty and Ferres showed more rejuctance than most. The debate was not about obstract proscuoles but it took account of the swift changes both. in the world artisating and in the agreeting in each country, especially Gormony and France. The fact that it was an international debate has led many western critics to secont with During Browner than 'Communast policy was act in Moscow'? But this is too sweeping a statement. and communicate medicating. Geographically, Brower is of course right, but his political application that the new policy was dictated by Russia's state massess is more debetable. One does not have to be a Consequent in order to accept as at least plannible the Community they that it was not so stuck a question of making directives to the alleged agents of a foreign power, but one of collectively working out & policy which took all factors into account, including the innerson of the Soviet Umon. The USSR was then regarded as the greatest asset of the world revolutionary movement, whose preservation mattered to all workers, and its interests were thought to coincide with those of the projetures in every country. This Communion helief may have been mataken and navve, but at was macerely held. It did not make those who held it unthanking robuss.

With regard to the Popular Front proper, Brower says nothing of Committees pressure, but movely remarks that as France, 'wathan a few weeks', the Unsted Front tectics 'were widened to saclede other groups in French minery' 4 The great majority of western critics full to make the necessary distraction between the United Prote and the Popular Proof, on the assumption that what applies to the one necesturnly applies to the other, and meanly all of them rely heavily on the testamony of Albert Vassart, a one-turns PCF delegate at the Contacttern (1944-5) who left the party in 1949. He amorts categorically that the 'abrust change' in 1914 'can be understood only by taking sito account the requirements of USSR foreign policy at that time" 1 The armount is bound on the evidence of Commerce discussions concurains the need to resources the United Front and make it less gurrow, but this is hardly greaf that those who advacated such a course had nothing but 'the requirements of USSR foreign policy' in mind. Are we then to seeme that those who showed reticency towards the new approach - who excluded Stahn hasself! - were lest concerned about those regrerements? It seems make to take the view that the rate of fraction led the Computers to quantion the windom of six earlier stand towards social-democracy and that, in stready suggested, the Nazi threat against the USSR was only one of the factors sevolved. For Names did not only threaten the Soviet Uning, it was also a deadly menace against the working class and the left in all European countries. Vassert also fails to subtranmers has statement that the Committee was a 'tool' of the Soviet apparament and 'was at He intract is advancing its foreign policy'. Such its assemblet oversimplifies the relationship between the Committee and the Soviet government to the point of caractering Actually, Commonta landars were not infragmently at odds with one mather, and on occasions, one or two of them good up to Stalin. This happened in 1924, when Danstrov, supported by Manualsky, argued with Stalin over the need. to revue the approach to social-democracy (for which Stahn was largely responsible) and mat with stubbury resistance up his part. 10 In. the end. Stales was won over, but only to the concept of a breader United Front, not yet to the Popular Front idea. Neither he nor the eest of the Consisters took much notice of the suggestion, thou tentatively advanced by Manushity (CPS U) and Brenhowsky , Polish CP), that an allumor with the non-proletarion strain should be conndered," for no directives to this effect were sent to any of the C1 sections. One may also note in pussing that Trutsky, who was cartrialy not bessed as favour of Stalan's Commutern, once told one of his disciples that 'you cannot think of the Consistern as being marely an unstrument of Status's foreign policy' and that the PCF was 'out only an agency of Messew', 12

The testamone of eve-wanceses, whose available, as always gauge extens. D. Brower was able to cunsult some of them (former PCF marabare such as Andre Perrut - a Pointburgue manufar nami 16 th and P. L. Durour - L Humanow's assessed adour from 1944 to 1999) and their reports strongthered his view that Mescow distrated the PCP's polyage. What is morewhat deconcerning is that Brower took their statements at fact value, group wandering whether their diductional curvers crained the purty may not have coloured their epithesis and their recollections. It is eve-estable units only when he has left the CP? To assume this is to be guilty of the very family that Containments are often accused of, put giveys without freepigeins, that of behaving mountainably those who are on your sale. Assure the ether eve-tritions. Become mosts have consisted, there was at heat one man whose treasurer could not usually be breaked each. That true Georges Cogniet, will alive at the time, who had been the PCF delegate at the Committee between 1946 and 1917, and had been across up the C I for a long time. He wrote in 2072 that it was pointless. to try and find out who gave "the order" to come out as favour of United Front at the top', for 2 was the collective working out of a among Community 11 which eventually led to at 10s alonchannel that the polarical discussions which took place in the officer of the International involved the representatives of all C.Ps and that they were bound on 'a lengthy study of the quantities they had to manuser' 15 Naturally, Commet's assertants should not be taken at face value, any more than those of Vannet and others, but they have at hour the adventure of providing mode information concurring the Way in which Communists, the majoracture in the drusts, reported the events in which they took port.

Abother Continuous eye-owness whose treatment is increasing and valuable at Contro Caretta, a close freed of Thoras. He describes a meeting which trush pince is Orinher 1934 at which name CI landers tried to discourage the PCF General Socretary from translating the Popular Print. Thoras himself briefly reports the increase in the cylic advisors of his merchanguage, Polo dis Prople. It that he union no fastice and comply says that he refused to how down. Coretti, who was present at the investing, gives more details. He says that on the marriang of 34 October 1934, Thoras recovered Togistes, Cortweld and the CI representative in France, Freed. Togistes, symbols on the

CI's behalf, suggested that the PCF should display great coution before offering an alisance to the 'petty bourgeou' party, the Radicals, as these were unotable alian and one ought to west for the more movement to grow stronger before making any deals with them. According to Ceretti, Thorex got up and replied: 'It's too late! This avoing at Newton, on the occurson of the Radical-Somahat congress, I am going to breach the slogan of the Popular Front. I have already written my speech, and I am not going to lineve out a angle word.' The sequel is even more exteresting, for Togisten letter told Ceretti that he had runtly echoed Scalin's reservations, but had now realized that Thores was radic. 17

In 1915, at the arventh CI congress, Dimitrov praised the PCF for having not 'an example to all the sections of the Commerce' and said that its experience and policies had 'helped to prepare the decisions of our congress'. As for Status, he finally endorsed the new policy, hersely because he felt that it complemented the USSR's own efforts to stand up to Hitler, but the previous account shows that, for from doctoring the policy to Thorax, he accepted at only at the last manute. One should not go to the extreme of mying that Thorex and the PCF 'dectated' the policy to Mousow, but the evidence shows that they played a pronocrang rule. As for Thorer's show of independence, it should not be exaggerated. He took a risk by adone with the Commhtro distoraty (Manusisky and Bronkowsky) who had dropped hosts about a possible albance with the middle strata, and furthermore, he wached out the details of the Popular Front in the light of the French tituation, but at the same time, he must have felt pretry confident that he would get CI support in the end, otherwise, it is unlikely that he would have gone shead. Complete independence from the Comintern was unthankable at the time.

Rice and full of the Popular Frant

The Popular Prout want through five phases - preparation (1933), formation (1934-5), victory (1936), conflicts (1936-5), and break-up (1938). The first phase was dominated by the Ameterdam-Pleyel Peace Movement and by the growth of the fascial threat shroad and at home. Abroad, Histor became Chancellor of the Resch in 1933 and immediately revealed the nature of his regime by dissolving Parliament (I February 1933), setting fire to the Resching (27 February), itopritoning Communicates, Socialism and democrats, suppressing working-class parties, and placing the Garman economy on a war feeting. His most speciacular defeat happened at the Leipzig trial of George Dunstrow, a Bulgarum Communist fiving in Berlin, whom the Name had tried to charge with the very crame they had commutted—the burgang of the Ranchetag. Dunstrow used his trial to accuse his accusers. In Pronce and elsewhere there were demonstrations to demand his release, and despine the S F1O's official alsofasses, Socialists rubbed shoulders with Communism. Finally, when Dunstrow and his co-accused were acquisted for lack of evidence against them and allowed to leave Germany for the Soviet Union, many greated this as the constitue victory of all unti-facciots. The trend towards unity was strengthened as a result.

In France meti, the effects of the crisis and repeated instances of corruption in high pinem (e.g. the Stawarty scandal)(# were explosed by fanciet leagues, connectiones referred to an "factious leagues", to discredit the republican regime and advocate its replacement by a Hitter-Managina hand of system. Our may argue about the extent to which these leagues were restly 'fascist', but what is certain is that they were extremely right-wing, that they thrived on nationalistic and enti-reportic propagands, and did not lade their admiration for Issly and Germany. The oldest of these leagues was the monarchist Acrost Proncesse, whose leader, Charles Maurria, daily thremened to have the lew Lion Blum put down like a doc. Next as apportunce was Colonel de la Roccour's Creux de Feu, which was made up of four defferent groups, all bound together by loyelty to 'The Chaef' and by their being that a maktary coup was needed in France. One of the groups was the Volontoures Nationaux, ex-servicemen who were impressed by the movement's military decipting. The other leagues were the Jennesses Partietts (mostly modests, aguspeed with fireirms and bludescos), the Francistes (made up of Ameterproleterest thurs), the Solidarist Prescent, the so-called Pederatron Nationale des Cantribuebles (which put attacks on the Republic before the taxpovers' ignerests), and eventually, after 1936, Dornot's Parts Popularie Prançais: On 6 February 1934 the leagues staged a march on the Chember of Doputies, with the ostensble aim of overthrowing the regime. They clashed with the police and were eventsally drives off, but not before many had been killed and wounded on both sides. Dalacher, who had called in the police, was described in the next wise press as a furtileur, and he researed on the 7th.

The left's reply to the 6 February faccots was, first, to stage constant-demonstrations on the same day, at the joint cell of the PCF

and ARAC. As demonstrators on both sides had taken up the dogse, 'Down with therees', this lad to a good deal of confusion, L' Humaand's educated of the 7th did not remove the confessor, for like the right-wing press, it called the Prisse Manuster a fundame. To make graduate women, whose the SFIO offered to occurate must east-forcest demonstrations with the PCF, the Community paper reacted by toying that unsted action was indeed accessary, but claimed that it was hard to maste with those 'who torpedo strikes' and 'pure the way for fraction". As for the party, it called for a hig demonstration on 6 Fobruary, which all anti-fascists were urged to attend, although as apacific sirvitation had been used to our organization. Describe a government ban, huge crowds answered the call, and among them manybers of the Socialist Youth Organisation. Barriendes were greated and gaving stones thrown at the police, got for the take of provocation. but in self-defeace. By midmahr, when the factoring conced, un possele had been killed, hundreds wounded, and 1,300 people were greated. The following day the SFIO paper, Le Popularre, described the event as the first working-class response to fascism. The most striking feature of a February was that at marked the beganning of grass-roots SFIO-PCF co-operation. The PCF leadership, atthough a sound a manufests classical credit for the CP alone, made the most that 'thousands of Socialist workers' had been present. In order to strengthen unity, the manufesto called on Communion to support the Genaral Strike which the reference CGT had called for the rath and the SFIO destroyers on the same day. Both the strike and the demonstration were a big success. Four and a half makes workers downed tests, and 150,000 people marched through the proces of Parts. They were led and addressed by SFIO leaders and PCF leaders, both of whom strumed the need for unity agreest fraction. They were greeted with punctional about of 'Uni-of d'ac-tion'. Popular many thus preceded formel usery 'at the top'

Fintercase are divided about the real agasticance of the 6 February 'coup'. On the non-Communicate ade, it is asserted that it was not 's finied coup d'était' but a surres of 'buwking shots, practicated, also, by firing about, it and 'n street demonstration which hastery would have forgotten if it had not taken a tragic turn'. Non-Communicat histories also deary that the language were forcest and springely intended to take power. On the Communicate unde, Cloude Walard argues that French fanciers were ineverably different from Stakes and German forcests but thered the more basic views. He concodes that their immediate and on 6 February was not power for themselves but a more reactionary government which would powe the way for fascism, and adds that this indeed is what happened whom Doumergue succeeded Daladier. It Without arbitrating between these two opposing points of view, one must note that 6 February was now as a fasciat comp by the left, rightly or wrongly, and it was the assessment which decisied popular response. Whether is was an over-assimation of the danger it is difficult to may. The fact remains that it was the Fopular Propiler.

Between February and July 1944 the trend sowards usary grew to such an extent that neither the SFIO nor the PCF could ignore it. Languet interremerked that to have done to would 'have condensed the SFIO to death'. For the PCF, too, the time had come in break discurvely with the past and to come out of the ghetto by responding to the people's unitary thood. After long negotiations, the two parties finally against a pact of united oction on 27 July 1934. The aim was 'consistent against fancient', and more specifically a company against the longues, was proparations, the government's docume-laws, and facciet terror in Germany and Austria. The pact advocated joint assettings and street demonstrations, and plodged that each party would come to attack the other. For the first time since Tours, the French working class was not split into two hostile camps, and it become possible senously to contemplate the reunification of the two parties, 'organic many' as it was called.

For the PCF, the aim went back to Thoren's 1932 slogan, 'A single ches, a magic trade union confideration, a magic party'. Soos after the united action part had been agned, in May 1935, a draft unity charter was submitted to the SFIO. Unlike other PCF actions of the period, it was intransagent, for in effect, it demanded the Socialists' publical and idenlogical capitalistics. In order to account for the party's toughness on this issue, three plausible hypotheses may be put forward. One is that the charter was intraded as a propaganda document in the debate, which incidentally never got off the ground because of SFIO relactance, between Communists and Socialists. However, it maghs have been more boness to offer it as such instead of situage a take-it-or-loove-it ultimature. A accord explanation is the PCF's then belief that there was no room for a working-closs party which was not Louisiant, on the double assumption (since given up by French Communists) that differences in the labour movement ensumed from conflicting ideologies rather than from dispursive experiences and that vacualism needed a one-party system. Finally, the PCF's intransigence may have been due to its increasing confidence that it was ground ground at the SFIO's expense, especially genong workers in the new and 'dynamic' industries.

Whatever our view about the PCF's surroussess on the town of 'present unity', there is no doubt that it cornectly wested to extend the auto-forcest alliance to the middle classes 13 Thores our our feelers to this effect on the eye of the Radical congress and called upon 'Radical Working people' to oppose 'the Front of reaction and Inscism' and take part spread to 'the Popular Front for liberty, labour and peace' (The definitive formulation was 'for brend, liberty and pence')25 The Congress rejected the appeal on the ground that the lang-serm sizes of the two parties were dismetrically apposed. The Socialists were not much warmer to the idea, erguing that Marxieta should not conclude programmetic alliances with bourgeous parties. Although they still believed in the 'management of capitalism', they contended that that recoured limited state unervention and planning, which were, of course, anotherns to the Rathcole. For a few mouths, they included at the pleasure of lecturing their Communist rivels in socialist doctrine. What they found to realize was that a new accustoms demanded a new approach and that the arment need was to reach agreement on the lowest common denominator acceptable to all anti-faccists. The Community who, in the 1930s, and talked of nothing but revolution, studdenly found thursarives in the stone; position of telling reformats. that revolution was not the same. Unfortugately, they care did not go beyond the level of practical common sense, for they did not provide a full theoretical analysis of the link between the democratic stage of the strumbe and the securiar stage. It is true that they often quested Lengt's dictors that the struggle for democracy does not 'divert the projetarut from the socialist revolution", but they failed to work out a revolutionary strategy which was based either on the cancept of stages (so advected by Gramma whose views were lettle known at the time) or on the concept of revolution as 'n process' (which is the case today), not even after Dimitrov, in his report to the seventh CI congress in 1911, had revived Lemm's advice that Communion should much out Yorms of transition or approach to the projectmen revolution.

Despite their leaders' retuctance, the rank and file is both the $F10 and the Radical party wanted unity. The worming of living conditions led to greater popular activity. Workers' strakes and demonstrations, protest ections by the urban and rural middle strata. ex-nervacemen's distances for a better deal, intellectuals' servicement. in the fight against frocum and war, all these combined to crease the Popular Front in practice before the political parties of the left got together to formalise it. The first contious may was made during the May 1935 musicipal elections. The PCF baying appropried that in the second battot at would withdraw its condidates of a Socialist had a better chance of winning, the SFLO did the mine towards Communints. The Radicals were reluctant to commit themselves as a matter of principle, but they allowed ad hoc electoral deals with other leftwanners. The electrons brought gains to the three parties, espeeasily the PC P which gained many municipalities, including twentygiven in the Puris area. The right-wing press was the first to point out that the Popular Pront, which it chose to call 'the Red Frant', was now a sunity. As for L'Hamaneté and Le Popularre, they particularly welcomed the election of Paul River in Paris, a member of the recently formed Vaphace Committee of anti-facint artellectuals and the joint condidate of the PCF, the SF1O and the Radicals, L'Humanité wrote that 'the Popular Front (bad) routed the 6th February thicken'. and La Popularie that "fairness (bad, been defeated". Soon afterwards. the SFIO congress and the Radicals' executive agreed to become part of the Popular Front, although the former continued to demand more for-reaching measures than a middle-class party was lakely to accept. The three parties moved a joint appeal to their supporture to extend the 14 July celebrations in Paris, and huge crowds answered the call. A science outh was taken by all the participents, pledging to remain tented against home and forests fascings. The Popular Front was officially born.

A month later, the seventh Commuters congress was held. Dunitrow, who made the mass speach, welcomed the events in France, present the PCF, and got the whole movement to adopt the building of a Popular France as its new strategy. In France itself, two further developments completed the formation of the left-oring alliance. One was the merging of the CGT and the CGTU, which begin in 1935 and was furnished in March 1946, an event which increased trade union membership from 900,000 (600,000 for the CGT and 300,000 for the CGTU) to nearly five mallion. The second one was the adoption in January 1936 of the Popular Frost programme. Its first part concerned the 'defence of liberty' and included such measures as the dissolution of the leagues, the granting of union rights in all workers, and the rassing of the school leaving age to fourteen. The second part dealt with the 'defence of pasce' and demanded controlled seduction of armembrate and collective security. The third and last part was a series of 'occasionate demands', assert at 'removing purchasing power' (including unemployment benefits for all), improving 'the ergumention of crudit' (especially through the associations of the Bank of France), and preventing financial corruption (including control of capital exports). Bluin later commented that it was the first time in France 'that a continuous of parties much before the electorate with a common programme' which they solemaly pludged to implement in fall if returned to power.

It is worth noting that most of the insusarus in the Popular Front programme were PCF-sampared and that it was the PCF which had mented that the overall arm should be to provide a left want government with the means to implement a 'programmy policy'. No wonder that the party's 8th congress, which opened as 22 January 1936, should have been seen by the delegates as a victory congress; if the PCF was born at Tours in 1930, it was at Villeurbanne in 1936 that it first emerged as a national force. The title of Therez's many report was tutnificant. The unity of the French nation, it was centred around the ides, never put forward before by the Community purty, that the whole of France could unite against 'the two hundred families' and agreest forcess. This approach went beyond the Popular Front allmost, for it contained in embryo the concept of the 'French Proot' which the party was some to propose a few months later. The call for many was not based up at erectyped clickes but on a detailed analysis of French realities, coupled with the refreshing assertion that a revolutionary party worth its salt had to display creative instantive. It was also at that congress that the PCF came up with the alogan, Pape paper fer riches, which increased its popularity among the pone and the under-provileged.

In April–May 1936 the Popular Front accord a major electoral victory, for the left secured 378 seems at the General Election , 346 m the old House) against 220 for the right. The main beneficiaries were the Community, whose poll went up to 15 2 per cont (one and a half mallion votes) and whose easts increased from 12 to 72. The Socialists gazard seem (49 but hardly any votes, whereas the Radicals lost half a million votes and 43 seets. The left majority in the Chamber was not matched by a majority in the country, as it had get only 46 per cent of the poll. What worked to its advantage was, first, the electoral system, and escendly, the fact that electors had generally switched their votes. to another jeft-wanger at the second ballet, thus showing their denry for gody and also, is many come, their gett confidence to the Commanners. For the PCF, the results were indeed for electoral business," 44 Jts many green were in the 'Red Belt' of Paris, in large terban control, to the endominal north and in a number of rural areas. The Community advance was due to the economic struction, the new mend ushered in he the Pupular Front (which everyone knew the party had unstated), the effectively emply domain would have the compound to a Force power for raches) and the fact that 'revolution was stall a symbol of progress for many Preachings who had no desire for a revolutionary change.  The PCF had not anticipated such an increase for stuckf, therty-five to forty tests having been its most established the election forecast. Moreover, it was surprised by the Reducal losses, but there is no evidence that the suspense amounted to diagrountment, as amented by Brown " and Turnky " These row puthors believe that Commission had beyond for a Radical Printent became the Radicals had a more pro-Soviet artestation than the $ F1O, but this is to assume, without proof, that the only aim of the Popular Front for the PCF was fraudly relations between France and the USSR. We are an order grounds if we assume that the unexpected Community advance and SF1Q strength round the most of PCF maintered participation in the Popular Front government with prester shorouess.

On the face of it, both their month should have encouraged the party to join the government, but when Lion Blum, who became Premier in the leader of the strongest guery's ested Communities to do to, they decimed the offer and preferred to piedge full support without actual participating. Theree benealf feverand participating, whalet his cleanet cultinarium. Ductor and Fraction, were against it, but the improvement he gives in his parabangraphy that the Publical Burning thok a different ways to from his is analonding, because the party energizer did not formally discuss the matter. 19 Whatever discussions tick place used have been informal and concurred only the too bridges. The remains for the Communicat discussion were complied and it is not very helpful to full back on the Soviet dear or machine and speak of a Moscow 'order'. If such a procur sastruction had been uses by the Committee, it is unlikely that Thorax would have innoced it. Actually, the thinking of both the CI and the PCF on this more want. through a comber of exacts. In the commer of 1934 the PCP begon to revice its long-standing approach to Parlament as a platform for revolutionaries and to coverage that a left wing presence in the Chamber mucht help the introduction of 'progressive' legislation. Hence the imprecidenced PLF piedge that it would emport any 'democranc government' which fought fraction. There was no mentrop of actual participation at this early stage, but us mon at the Popular Proot sites had been lessached, the guestion was bound to be gust to the party, authorably by the S F JO, which authorized its rival to choose between 'structural reforms', which of course would have been resected by the Radicals, and taking part to a 'bourseon government'. a stand which Communists and their forerunners, the incident left, had repercedly condemand in the past. The PCF's norwer was to draw a distinction between a socialist apperament (then a remote possibility), a thoroughly 'bournous' government (which Communisets could never support), and a new type of government, 'amposed by the masses", which could god should by supported. This ingrises of boldness and custom was endorsed by the Committees.

In America 1935 at the seventh CI congress, the possibility of Community participation in a Popular Pront government was guardedly mentioned. 24 In his opening speech. Directory asserted that if such a government was formed 'under conditions of political crisis' (one of which was end to be that the 'state apparatus' had become 'parelysed'), Communicts should define by support it and mucht even soin it. He was careful to stress that the same had to be actiled as the bobt of as 'actual utuation' and that 'no ready-made recipes could be prescribed in advance. Thorex moke in the more vern, and on his etturn to France, he went further and said that mut as the C1 had none beyond the PCF's golsey of the preceding period, the PCF, as turn. could 'creatively' go beyond the CI congress. In October 1945 he probledy pledged. We see ready to some our responsibilities in a Popular Front government '11 Shortly afterwards, both the CI and the PCF grew apprehensive concurrang the 'make' involved, the CI because it was not sure the French party was strong anough to stand teo to its partners as a predominantly non-Communist government. and the PCF because a feared that its presence in the government maght frighten the maddle classes. The result was that during the election compares the party stated that it would succept a Popular Front cobiner, but would not join at 14 In the light of these facts it is difficult to muck of Comunityra pressure pure and matche. These were manyings and heatestone in the whole Communit movement, and there were reflected in the PCP's changing tactics. One must add that the party laudership from supretted its decision to stay outside this government, which to this day is regarded as having been a 'mistake'. We shall see presently that, subsequently, the party made two offers to join a Blant government, but the offers were turned down. ¹⁵ There is no evidence that these PCP moves were discouraged by the CI, in any case, the latter's position also evalved, many is the summer of 1936 two Specials Communists were allowed to enter the France Popular government handed by the Socialist Large Caballaro.

A little before the Blum government took office, and whilst at was being formed. France was sweet by a wave of strikes, involving fulliant of workers, some of whom work not even annound, and factory occupations. A full account of these strikes has yet to be provided, but it is safe to assume that they had economic causes (low wases and poor conditions), political ones (for a month, the country had no effective government because the PM had resumed but Blum. would not take office before he was legally exteriod to do so) and psychological ones (the strakes were a show of strength, encouraged by the left's electoral vactory). The strikers' attitude to the Popular France government was not hostile, as was sometimes suggested by Brum and even by some PCF leaders (e.g. Perror); they were rather keen to stanulate the government and force the employers' hand 14 As for factory occupations, which were then quite new,15 they were not intended as a form of expropriation, but as a way of ensuring 'that the factories should not be kept working with the aid of blackles. labour' 16 One must also mention the fact that accupations gave workers a chance to assert their dignety at the point where it was most often decugrated and of showing that they could occasive themselves Without being ordered about. Sumane West, who mak part in the movement, wrote at the time:

This strike is in itself a pay — Joy to enter the factory with the westing permission of a worker on guard — Joy to hear united of the metalists due of the machines, the world of music, songs and longitur — Joy to pass before the bound with your head held high — . At long low, for the first tume, and for ever, there will be either manuscrim around these machines than mester, compulsion, subsumpretion. Methods that will bring some pride to one's heart, that will invest lattir business worthich us all the metal 17

The evidence or our disposal suggests that the strikes were largely spontaneous and that the PCF was no less surprised than other parties. However it alone was able to play a key rule and extend its influency as a cough hosping it had always advacated "team action". It immediately expressed on Transpel sympathy' to the cirthers and sold. the government that the best way to end the surface was to entury the demands of the working class". At the court time, the party was parament that the string provinces should not become 'wild' and alwans the row of the population, thus populating the procureus affiance that had not been healt. On 11 June 1936, following the employers' extensions. There's god that it was important to have how to end a strike " Going beyond the well-known organizat that workers should always be sendy to accept compromises when all or most of their distrated had have met, he arround that this was expecally important new, in order not 'to break the referencesin of the thomas, the submissions of the Popular Posts'. Replying it infrastrato productable generators charges of soth-out', he solded. The Popular Front victory embeddened the PC F is try and extend the allumer still further, and on 6 August 1936 Theore advocated the formation of a Printe Prongers, based on the Popular Frunt, but qualiting ment groups and parties which agreed with the left on three mouse only – the defence of 'republican leve', including the Matagnon agreements, which mentionally were restrict by a longe parliamentary majority, much brunder than the left, the 'defence of the national accessory', including measures become by come artists and the quidily classes and stops to prevent 'astorage by come artists inclustration, and the defence of France's freedom and independence through a farrigo poincy committed to proce and collective accurry. On these three powers, the PCF based asserted, 'we can reach agreement with these who do not approve at the whole Popular France.

Ongnached UNIVERSITY OF MICHI programme, even if they do not give up all their views! The formation of a French Front mucht have cut across artificial party barriers and generated exchanges for limited but much-acaded referent. The cretics who see 'the band of Moscow' behind the PCF's unriserve, on the ground that the USSR needed a unused France to reset Hatley, probably everleek two facts. One is that the outbreak of the Somish Cavil War in July 1935 had clearly shown that a novernment relying on roughly one half of the population engine the other lacked subusty. the other is that a French Frent mucht have asved the Popular Frent in France and strengthened the country's international position. Deniel Brower, who is not generally favourable to the P.C.F., believes that the party's attende memmed from genuine concern 'with the internal devisions of France', 19 and he adds that 'The French partiament was a house divided, and there was little the Communist party could do to overcome the divisions' " The SFIO in particular flatty refused to have anything to do with a French Front and remeted to 'revolutionary' organicate to jumpy its mand. In September 1996, the PCF reloctantly withdrew its offer, at any rate in in many words. It told its Socialist partners that it would 'refrain from using the phrase, Front Françair' (9 September 1936).

The two mass areas of conflict within the Popular Front alliance were in the fields of foreign policy and funnional policy. The first one was overshadowed by the Scienish civil war, which broke out on 18 July 1946, when right-wing generals, led by France, quarted to armed insurraction against the Prents Popular government which had been formed in February. The republican government tried to buy arms from framely democratic countries and expected that France as perticular would respond favourably, partly because of her treaty obugations to Spain, and partly because she had a left-wing government, However, Blass refused to help. Privately, he would have laked to do so, but he was afreed of being dan vowed by the British. National government, which dislated the France Popular (a bunch of leftest) and was assume not to provide a pretest for Hitler and Museolini to intervene on Franco's aide. Anthony Edea worned Blum. that British would not most France of she were attacked as a result of her Spanish involvement, as this would not be a case of 'unprovoked attack' much as had been enviseded at the Franco-British treaty. What Eden come up with was that all states should jose in a Non-Intervention Commuttee, and Blues, reluctabily or otherwise, supported ham. The only trouble with Eden's proposal was that leafy and GerSo Maturity many estensibly agreed to it but get round it by sending Prance large numbers of so-called 'volunteers'. Thus, non-intervention termed into a trupe fure. As for the USSR, it decided at first to join the Non-Intervention Committee, probably as a deplement mannessive, for a could hardly have exposeed that the fascus powers would benow their pladge. Prench Communists defended its action out of 'internationalism', but many of them were puzzled. Others on the left spales of a stab as the lack of the Spanish republic. Hawaver, when evidence that the fascus decisions were sending large supplies of tanks and asteralt as well as whole buttalons to the Spanish robels became plans for all to one, Scalm revised his previous stand and end that his country would provide the Republicans with maintary mentiones, adding that their cause was 'the common cause of all advenced and programmy manked'.

Instally, the PCF's public reaction to the Sounish events was one of continue, a probable reflection of Soviet contain, but the party soon came out, not against the principle of non-intervention, but against the way it was supposedly applied. Its main charge was in fact that British and Prance were through blind eye to the real intervention of Italy and Germany. Tonether with others on the left, it organized public meetings which detaunded 'Arms for Spins' and 'Plunes for Soun' On 25 August 1936, of one such meeting, Thorex said, 'Yes, We are in favour of pon-intervention. but we are also against the blockade inflicted on Republican Spain! Aid for Spain was not only necessarilias a dury for the left but as a measure demanded by Prance's successty against foreign attack. As for the Ensente Conducte with Serious, the purry supported it, like the rest of the field," and did not urge a break with the British government over Spain, it did however class that as independent policy on Bhasi's part would not find to such a break on the somewhat move assumption that Labour pressure possid abor the Natural government's stand. In addition to demanding governmental measurance to Spain, the PCF played a leading role so the setting up of the International Brigades, volunteers from fiftyfour nations who went to Spain to fight on the republican ride. Two Pointburges members, Marty and Billows, left their point to pain the Beneades, many rank-and-filers, among them future Repotance members such as Talon and Fabren, followed their example. The full story of the International Brigades cannot be told here. Neither can we enter the debate, which is still going on today, concerning the strained relations between Communists, on the one head, and onecharts and Trotakyists, on the other. We should content ourselves with noting that there was intolerance on both usion, as the Communists wanted a broad albance against Franco, whereas their ultra-left critics thought the civil war should be the preliade to a socialist revolution. As far as the PCF was concerned, spart from taking on responsibility for organising the passage of volunteers through France (about which the authorities were decadedly tincooperative), it decaded to abutum in the Docember 1936 foreign policy debate in Partnesseut in order to show its opposition to the government's Spanish policy and yet at the same time its reluctance to break the Popular Front Albance.

This albance can note greater difficulties because of its partners' conflicting views with regard to flament policy. The PCF identity. Fave power les riches, was dismissed by Blum because he did not think his government was strong enough to stand up to the so-called May of Argent, i.e. the combined forces of Prench finance and industry. He learned that a head-on collesion with them would lear han Reduced support and fracines small appeators. In order to check the simming export of caustal, which had reached at halbon france by the statusm of 1936), he decided, first, to devalue the franc (September 1936), and then to proclam a 'poure' at the government's reforms (February 1977). The devaluation almost multified the wase increases gained by the Mangoon agreements, but it was welcomed by a section. of the bourneouse as at enabled French exporters to undescut their competition in the world market. The PCF criticised the move, but for the cake of mosty, as MPs voted for the government. The 'name' implied that facal reform, checking the export of capital, and a series of mont engreyements to help the aned and the poor, were shalved for the time being'. This was incended to pacify the bankers and the industrialists, but it did nothing of the sort, and Blum's enemies continued to attack him on the economic front. The PCF replied to the 'pause' by saying that there should indeed by one, but against 'the trusts', not against the working people. It put forward as alternative economic policy, which included the taxing of big fortunes, measures nearner speculation, and the nationalization of all defects monopolies. (Itumenily, 2 was the Socialists who had insisted on national moons during the talks on the Popular Front programme, and the Countries ans, supported by the findicule, who had combated them.)

than Blom 142 and to make lavish donations to the fascist learnes, with one of their representatives openly mating that they had 'no intention of purticipating in the closic purhomoutary game, because the driving force for the action, law] outside Parlament* *1 Officially, the language had been descrived by the government, but the Cross de Few recogstytoted irself as a policical party, the Parts Social Français (PSF), and 6 chapdentine body, the Cagonile (The Handad Men), come tota being, although as expresses was not revealed before the end of 1937. The Casoniards were organised on malgary have and resorted to acts of terrorum. The formacion of the PSF gave rise to a bloody incident in March 1937. The new party held a marting in the Parison workingclass usburb of Chehy, but the local Popular Front committee staged a counter-demonstration. The police appened fire on the demonstrators, seven of whom were killed, whilst many others were wounded. The PCF demanded the resignation of Dormoy, the Home Minister, and Thorez even called Blum 'the murderer of Cheby workers'. It was the first serious raft in the allmose, despite the fact that Duclos spoke of 'our consende, Liton Bitum' when he recalled that at was he who had described the PSF in 'nothing but the reconstituted Cyotx de Feu'.

In June 1937 the flight of capital reached 60 billion francs, and Blum then felt compelled to demand from Partnament full powers to deal with the situation. He was supported by the Chamber of deputies, but not by the Senate, in which there was a right-wing majority, which voted against him by 146 your to 168. Bluit accepted defeat and remand, demote a PCP appeal not to do us, compled with the offer of Commission minutural participation is order to strongthen his hand. Blum was succeeded by a Radical, Chastemps, whose government tasted uptil January 1938. When it fell become the Socialists had refused further constitution to the banks, the PCF declared kinell ready to enter either a broad government from Thorez to Paul Revocod or a stractly Popular Front government. In the end, it was Chauteness again who formed a predominantly Radical government. As he pledged amplementation of the Popular Front programme, the PCP voted for it. On the other hand, the right wing also voted for it. probably resoured by an moderate companion. Such hollow unantmanny proved that despite the Pt.F's preclaimed belief that the Popular Front level on, it had in fact begun to break up. Why the party refused to acknowledge this unpalatable reality can only be explained by its hope that the trend could be reversed. In this, it was deeply mattakes. In fact, Chauseman remaned in March, was followed.

by Blum (he again refused PCF participation) who lained until April, and finally, Daindser took over it was under the Radical premiership of Daindser that the official end of the Popular Front occurred (October 1938).

This final break-up was count by the foreign policy developments which led to the Musich agreement of September 1938. The Musich conference was attended by Chamburlam, Daladser, Hitter and Mussolms, and it ended with Britain and France condoning the dismemberment of Carchaelovakia, which had been demanded by Hitler. on 'ethanc grounds'. It was the change of the policy of 'approximent', are of concentrate to the funcial dictators in the proclaimed hope that such a course would avert war. According to the PCF, this proclearned hope was only a facade, for the real ears was to gave Hutler a free band at the east so that he could attack the Soviet Union. The latter had been a notable absencer at Munich. It was herred of 'the socialist Soviet Union', the PCF declared, which had led the Anglo-French. ruling classes to support Hatler, and in the case of the French. bourgeome, betred of the Popular Front. How else could one account for a policy which threatened France's security, the party demanded? How che, at went on, could one captain the leasency towards the Cappulards, who were released after a few mouths in pail, and towards such 'fifth columnsts'el as the mambers of the Counté Franco-Allemagne who were on good terms with Orio Ahetz, the Nazi diplomer suspected of beans a gov? For the PCF, Musich was 'a triumph of class selfabors,", as its spokenium on foreign affairs, Gabriel Péra, publicly declared. The same Péra indicted the government in the post-Musich debate in Parliament and accorded that 'appearement' had not saved peace. 'Peace', he said, 'has to be It is agreeme you that we shall wan the buttle for peace " However, apart from the seventy-three Communist M.Ps and only two others (the netropalut Hears de Kersha, and the Societat Isaa. Bonhey), the whole Chamber endored Daladier's policy

Shortly after the purishmentary debute, the Radical executive met on 13 October and clasmed that by voting against Munich, the PCF had 'deliberately withdraws from the political formation to which it never counts to preclaim its attachment'. At the end of October the Radical congress voted almost unanamously for a resolution which mainst that the Radicals an longer belonged to the Popular Front Duspite Blum's confidence that the latter 'lived on', this was the end. In November the CGT called for a twenty-four-hour strike against PCP The government tried to break the strike, channing that it was putaisably motivated and even government; by December it was putaisably motivated and even governmentarily. In December the French Foreign Manuster, Bonnet, met his German appears number, von Ribbentrop. They signed a Declaration of Friendship between the two countries. The PCF later made much use of a conversating between Bonnet and the German ambassader, in the course of which the French statement had said their in case of war, 'electrons would be unspended——and the Communicity would be brought to book! "*

The PCF interpretation was that Bonnet had not used to frighten Hatler but to researce him. As for the German ambassador, he cryptically referred to 'the present admirable attende of the French people."

During the last stages of the Popular Front, the PCF tried to prevent its cultures, that only by mining protests, but also by purpose forward a comprehensive alternative peticy, what Thorus is November 10x8 called 'n nasunae plan of national economic, social and marid recovery. A programme for accommanc recovery was natroduced by Ductos at the January 1939 PCF national conference. He recalled that the Popular Front programme, if it had been implemanned, would have checked the flight of cagutal, prevented fluenced frend, and 'myed our country many difficulture.' What was needed now, he added, was maintenance of the social mains strendy mode. steps to protect the family, the return of capital already exported sothat it could be invested to finance public works achieves, control of the trusts, the astronoloution of do facto monocolous, a tax on wealth and profits, and a thorough reform of public finances. On the most of netronalmetion, although the PCF thought that Radical objections had lest many of their relevances. Duches was careful to recall that an early as 1907, the Radicals themselves had come out as favour of the notionalisation of manopolies, calling a 'n monopoly in the hands of the notion. In order to achieve all these arms, a new programmer was needed, one that the PCP would definitely rom. The concept of the party as 'a party of government' thus emerged for the first time. It was to reuppeur time and again in the party's havinry

A best assessment of the Popular Proot policy issuehad by the PCF most include its achievements, in weakaceses and its espectance for the party. The achievements were socio-political, cultural and psychological. The first saclade the Mangaon agreements, some of which proved to be greverable in g. collective berganing, and the paid holidays which even the Vicky regions deput out take every), the nationalisation of the Bank of Prance, the Grass Board (which recolated the prace of agricultural products), improved irving standards. and according to the PCF, the fact that factors did not were a France. in it had done in Italy and Germany. Non-Communists who believe that there acres was a real faccus threat as Prance naturally do not agree with the PCF on this issue. However, few would dispute its last clause that the Popular Front led to a cultural rennessance. Massauc de to culture, cultural centres where ordinary pounts and instilluctuals. that, hostels and learner contrast which were also cultural in the brandest sense, the emension of sports facilities, and the end of a versual meht-wate monapoly in the field of cultural paradicula, illustrated by the appearance of Vandouds (which published articles by Gide and Remain Rolland), these were some of the more striking features of the period. To this, one west add the novels of Mairway and Aragon, the paratings of Picasso, especially the famous Guarence, which exposed the frecasts' brothley), and Retent's films, such as La Granda Illustore and La Marsotlianes. Finally, the PCF itself founded its own Université Outraire, and re-passed Université Negrotile, and pubhished periodicals such as Constitute (directed by Aragon and Nation) and La Pensie. It is equally difficult to deny that, psychologically, the Popular Front period was experienced by many as one of say and confedence. Liton Blum later referred to it as 'unit ambullar' in break in the weather and Ductor in his Memory called it 'les yours encolosités du Pront Populaire".

In the PCF's view, the chief weakases of the Popular Front is that it rememed an elimnor 'at the too', for the SFIO and the Radicals fought against the formation of broadly-based Popular Prout commit-$866. Brower potes that "Consequent offerts to build up a mass polatical snovement . brought bittle success".  But purhaps the party could have fought harder on this issue. At the arventh CI congress, Dunityov had warned that 'the danger of right exportances (would) increase in proportion as the wide insited front developed". It may be unfact to charge the PCF with 'opportunion', one of the worm not in the Communist calcular, but looving Communist jurgen under, it is true that it was guilty of over-optimism. Marcover, anday's PCF commentators feel that the idea of popular commentees, following agreements at the too, mucht have been untable at the time, but that it featured the illusion that the mass movement should follow the landers instead of preceding their decisions. We shall have more to say about this in the final chapters.

Another weakness, according to both Communists and non-Community, was the disunsty of the French left. It is neither easy nor profitable to and object to the game of fanding the colores for the state of offers, but one most agree with Brower that 'so the first low months of the Popular Front government, the Communic deputies fully coengrated in the contexts of On one most, however, Communist. intransigence was an obstacle to closer unity, and that was the PCF's aggressive defence of the Soviet Union, especially the understance of Stalement gravess, even of it was done in moral faith in the hisher that the som was to crush the counter-revolution. It was not only that French. Community ochood Prevale and Investor, but that the language they tined to defend the indefensible was almost hysterical, which was not conductive to narrowing the gap between them and those who reported them with connecting. Admittedly, Stahn's foreign policy was anti-factor, admirtedly anti-Soviet empeans were often as unbalanced as the PCF's propagands, 40 but these facts can only constitute partial cucases.

One must also examine the argument that the Popular Franciscs a finiture. That it finally collapsed is a fact, but it is also a fact that it left. its mark. A more sophisticated variant of the 'fashire' accument in that the Popular Front was a "failed revolution". This is the Transity at thous. The PCF reply is based on what Marganta call up 'sentyus of the belonce of class forces', or as plainer terms, an amesument of whowas stronger than whom. Recalling Leann's description of a 'revolutionary utsistion' as one in which those who are ruled do not most the old and these who rule counse continue in the old way, the party classes that neither condition was fulfilled in 1016-8 France. First, it points out that factory occupations had not been a form of generate encuetions (as fact, the employers' property was acregulously respected) but a way of stopping blacking labour. Secondly, the presents and the middle strate, without whose superet or at least "honevolent neutrality" a uncasist revolution is impossible, were cortosoly not in a revolutionary mond. Actually, many of them were showing ages of anxiety about the strikes, even when they ware 'progressive' enough to write to the PCF General Socretary. Therex. mentioned a telegram which he had received from peasants who were wormed that the lorry drivers' strike maght last so long that their cherries would as bad before they could be sold. What was ripe in their view was not the revolution but the charries! Incidentally, a Trotakyet histories, Tom Keepp, admitted in 1970 that 'ander the coffusion of the strikes the models class moved to the right' ? Franch Community class that they were aware of this or the time and they further old that it is, in Long took, a first of Blandman. in extension a revolution of the party. does not enter the remarkly of the majority of the people, as proved by defining facts. According to the PCF, 'definite faces' was out what Transposets had fashed to preduce: Penalty, the P.L.F. organs that the amployees, for from boxing another to 'company to the old way', challenged the Popular Front is countlied there, that the artire and the anison more on the oute of 'law and order'. not revoluting, in was shown when they fired as the principal Clothy. demonstrators, that La Recour had sentern exposurers request for civil war by army afficers, and family that Larrange and Italy, probably bucked by Braum, would have merevened to avevent a probranch production in France. Whatever one may these of the PC.P's proposents, and everywhere of whether States did really torus sucret matrictions to be 'benchmen' to great ment unrest in Prance, the evaluace at the historius a demonstration to massest that it is should quarkely that a revolutionary arreings would have succeeded. One most also comoraine that even at the height of the Popular Frant, the built of the presentary, the modelle stress and the untellectuals did not fully access the load of the working class, that despite formal unity, the trade many movement was still salp between references and eventurements, and functive that the PCF sheld and busine to lost untuit of its combinate by its uncompromised defence of Statusti purious.

The Popular Francisco the PCF's here more instative. Even a cratic much as Boomer, who believes that the party leaders were at first Transmission where mis duty was to appears orders ." concerlet that "they alsowed real attentionment in their polytical capacity a year later". and thus 'the Community party had finally made the French repolish can tradition in own' 14 He concludes his work by menne that 'The Popular Front brought together countration and the Titled Republic and created a new furnishment to The same clean was made by the PCF most when a told so you'd congrue in Dynambur 1917. It could also boart of closer links with the people, disc largely to its new approach, but also to the organisational changes adopted at the previous congress, such as the replacement of large reposes by smaller accitors playing an active role in the localities. Parry propagands had become less aggressive, less steriotyped, and party members had become, in the words of Thoruz, 'men and women with greater ability, and also warmer, more generous hearts'. The Popular Front was the first great 'mutation' of French communium. It was destined to be followed by others, but until the 1976 congress, none perhaps was so deep and as thorough.

CHAPTER 4

Trials: the acid test of war

(1939-45)

The 'past' and the 'phoney wee'

During the first eacht months of 1939, the PCF tried unsuccessfully to revive the defunct Popular Front and the no less defunct Peace Front between the west and the USSR Thorou's CC street at May. menuficantly analytical 'Prenchman, upote', was a plea for neconal unity against foreign fascium and 'invernal reaction'. Blem had just moved a resolution at the SF1O congress, advocating the make kind of unity to defead both the republic and France's independence, and Thorex. channel: This is exactly the Frunch Front which we proposed in July 1946.1 Desome this apparent convergence, the SFIO congress forbade Socialists to work with Communists in 'United Front organismhons' Another aspect of Thorez's speech concerned the PCF's stand on national defence. The speaker asserted that it was the employers. who were asbotasing war production, whereas workers were 'ready to account the sacrifices which the defence of the country and the defence of peace demand', and he concluded by urning the formation of 'n generate government of national defeace. But it was too late. The Frunch government had unmarakably moved to the right, whelst British and France were at best hakewares about co-operating with the Soviet Union in resisting Hitler.

On 21 August 1939 a bombobell exploded: Germany and the USSR amounced their decision to conclude a part of non-aggression, which was duly signed two days later by Molotov and Ribbentrop. The Seviet explanation (which one need not endorse, but which one needs to know as order to understand the PCF's policy) was that the Anglo-France-Soviet negotiations about a part of mutual assistance had led nowhere, because the western governments, represented at the Moscow talks by minute officials who had no authority to sign important documents, had shown no real desire to reach agreement For example, they had supported Polond's refamil to allow Soviet troops to pass through its territory to make contact with the enemy.

The Soviet government was therefore compelled to neck other ways of elementing the war danger against its country, which is why it accepted Hatier's proposal for a Soviet-German non-aggression pact Predictably, the Soviet version was endorsed by all CPs, but some wastern statement also felt with Lloyd George that the west had been 'trifling with a grave attention' by sending to Moscow's clerk in the Foreign Office.' Be that as it may, the controversy which encode was not so much about the events which find had to the pact, but about its neture. In Prance the government maintained that it was a 'Hitler-States allience', wherein the PCF manned that it was merely a pact of non-aggression. The public clouses of the treaty – the only ones which were known at the time – tended to confirm the party's amendment.' As for the secret clouses, they were revealed in 1945 only, and so could not have been used by either mide in the discussion."

French public opinion was flabbergamed by news of the poct, and the PCF was not encount. Despite bland faith in Stalin, which for many Communists quickly evershadowed all other considerations, the party's immediate 'gut' reaction was one of shock and bewalderment. Caruto, aithough he chame not to have lost his boarings, admits that 'dedicated comendes were left without a categoral'. I Far a day or two, the main leaders kept eilest, and only minor figures were given the uncaviable task of 'explanang' the pact. On 22 August, Marcel. Gitton, a deputy who later defected, told Co. Sow that the USSR had 'compelled' Germany to sum the pact and that this was 'a victory for punce¹ P. L. Darner (who also disfected least) wrote in L'Humanité. of the following day that the French government should also max a pact with the Soviet Union, adding that 'the place for Moscow Jerves every morame at 8 a.m., Monosour Daladier'. When the party leaderalso broke as where on the a 5th, it was not only to partify the pact, usen as Stelan's revenue on Manach, but also to assert that 'if it spate of everything. Histor unlambes wor', he should know that 's unsted French people' would reset ham, 'with the Community in the front hose. Theres, who made that statement to the PCF deputies and released at to the prem, added that his party supported the government's measures to guarantee France's frontiers and give assistance to Poland, and he repeated the point that an Angio-Franco-Soviet alhance remained 'quite femilie and necessary'. The next day, L'Humanus reported the speech under the following headlines. "Unity of the French aution ensure the Hitlerite aggregation" and "The Moscow Pact provokes a solit in the warmongers' bloc'. Such sentitheirts did not prevent the paper from being mond by the government and beaused for an undefinite period, an action which was followed by the suppression of all Communior newspapers and the arrow of many Communior techniques. In space of this, the PCF continued to argue that support for the part did not precisely supporting a defenders way against 'the Federice aggression', and on a September oil its departue word for the maintary credits demanded by the government. The latter, however, mak no notice and went on treating defence of the part of 'distance' and soon after an wasanable.' On at September the PCF was destance diagol, and it had to go underground used August 1944. At firm, there were two landership control, one in Brownis, which steinhold Fried and Duckes and which was in truch with the Committee, and another one in Parts, which was handed by Frischen, eventually, the Brownis 'emitter' openit to great it.

It was not early the government which present the PCF to evade that the part, but also its former allow and many of its resear supporters, all of whom charged it with spreadly following Mescow. The charact was not quite current, because aithough the party defended the part by more the arguments provided by Soviet propagation, it adopted a pre-war policy for mostly the whole of September, whilst the Soviet Usual remained postral. Yet it was as August that L. Harmanette was benned and in September that the party was continued. The more there were both of their - lock of nativeteen - assessed at solid that it described many extends sympatheters and an approach to aumber of party impations. The former included furnise intellectuals such as Langevin and Joint Come, who had not put prends, they veneral their energy-years but that and opening at tech the party. The latter, were either people who, like Paul Numa, reagand because they found thinguileis "enthout a compagn" (major reproped of fought shingtide the party during the Resistance), or undevelopin who could not face that prospect of represents. The reserv-erous deputies and the local courscallers who publicly dissecuted themselves from the party most hove included people of both congress. Unfortunately, the PCF leaderthis branched them all as 'treature'. Our may purhase underwood this reaction when one receib that the party was being bounded at the time, but it is hard to condenc it.

On a September 1949 Stream and France declared war on Gerthany, but for the first eight months, 'the Prench and British armon punitvely set on the defensive waiting to be attached' * in the words of Forest, Prence is at war, but does not want war.

want of war against the foreign for, the government wages war against the internal advartary " It was then that the nackanine, drille de guerre, was cannot, the phrase having first been med by Roland Dorgotte in a newspaper article. Its English equivalent, phoney wor', does not accurately convey its full monning, for it morely implies that it was the wrong hand of war, without properties that compations 'funny', in the conce of odd, was taking place, wethout conveying the tioner of beweithermant which is amplical in drafe de guerre. The bewiderment was caused by many factors - the lack of inditory proportions, doubled undecouply become we wore 'going to hade our weeking on the Sengfried line", and the Magazot line was unprognable, the grouppy as high circles of unif-confound admirate of Project and Manushas, two 'neutrals' who had at least at much satisfaction. for bring considered in Hatler's allies in that other 'mestral', Stales; the learning towards Capoulands and friends of Hitler, whilst Commounts and malitant wade unscaues were bearn insled, and, most expect of all, the fact that many French employers were at best held-hearted in their consourt for the war offers and that some of them. engineerd to supply Germany such you see from Lecrome we Lununburg. Whether in addition to buing mystafied and confused, French public agreem was also pacified melitard may be true, but the 'pacifism' was currently encouraged by the government and the mades.

The anti-Communicat represency, which started with the business of the party (described by filtum to 'natural and legitimate' but a 'mistake' all the same), was assentified. PCF deputies and sension were deprived of their same, and PCP militaries were expelled from the CGT. On an Murch 1940 Sestant, who was now a measure and stell thought that 'de communicame, tould l'agrants', told the Upper House that 2,778 Communist councillure had been domined, that all Comgregate propers had been because and all Communical program plants. closed down, that has trade utacos under Communicat hardership had hose denoticed, and that so fer 1,400 Community malriants had been directed, whilst others were being 'tracked down'. In March and April, the mas of farry four PCF deputes was held as comme. They were charged with having formed a Workers' and Passages' Group in the Chumber after the beamer of their party , which Herriot, at Franchist of the Chamber, had assured their they were legally estated to dos, with having requested a debate on peace in Parkement, and with boing connected with the Third International. All the accound but three (who announced their resignation from the party in court) channel that they had done nothing illegal. Speaking on their behalf, Frunçais Billous stated to a final speaki. 'Neither the Continuous deputies not communicate on trial here. We it was who, with the greatest neal, exposed Historian to the Frunch public. . . We don't want to be the slaves of Hitler, the wassle of Chamberlain, or the services of Massocian. . '* The accused were found guilty and were serumond to long terms of impresonment. The classes of the anti-PCF drive came with the docree, segmed on 10 April 1940 by the Southest, Sarol, which made Communist propagands panishable by death. A public protect was served as British, bearing the agentures of twenty prominent figures, Show, Wells and Forster among them, which declared that 'the world cannot be seved from Names. By instance the standards of that abborrant regime'.

As an organisation which had been made illegal, the PCF was not the strong printing to answer its specimes. It did, however, manage to publicing its views, mustly by means of leaflets and L'Homanies, both of which were published underground. Its stand up to May 1940 west through two stages, one of support for the war, toes largely at a defensive war, and one of opposition to the war, described as being "terpenature on both aider". During the first stage, the party strucked the government not for waging the war but for not waging it properly, i.e. for not entirting the support of the unions and the people and for not dealing enternal faction a death blow. During the extent stage, the nurv's artifude was inconsistent, for, on the one hand, it conmaned to denounce 'the ruline class' for its readmens to sell this property down the river, and on the other, is demanded the end of the war and the concinuou of peace, coupled of course with alliance with the Soviet Union. The first man of the new approach was a long CC statement, deted 21 September 1936, which was outsided ///anti/awe In pass (We must make pages). After sadicing the French government's pre-war policy of 'appearment', it concluded that the wignet task was so make pusse, organing that the wor 'empassed on the French people is as forger (my emphasis) an auti-factist, auti-fittler wer' and that France could integrand her ascurity and har independence without wer. The expression 'no longer' may perhaps be read as an extraopt to postaly the party's metal stand. The CC statement was followed by a letter, dated a October 1949, which the Workers' and Peasants' perhameneary group () c. the Communical deputies) sent to Edouard Harriot, the secondart of the Chamber of Desuzies. The letter referred to the 'puncy offensive' which had been legached on Al Sontember by Gurmany and the Seviet Union? and advocated acceptance of the two countries' puace proposals by the French government. The only source given was that Germany was 'Year by internal contradictions' (which were not glaringly obvious at that time!) and that thanks to the 'maght of the USSR', there could be a return to collective security which would infegrated Prance's independence. Latter in the same meath, a PCF appeal appeared in the underground L'Humaneti It declared that 'Community hate Hitler and the resource of anti-working class violence which he represents', but it fining to my what practical steps should be taken to defeat such a regime, and if it was silent on this issue, it was because the PCF landership had really nothing to properly, uport from expressing its faith in the USSR and its confidence that the German people would in due course get and of Hitler. In the mountains, the duty of Prench anti-fascists was deemed to be the deputication of their own Yascist' ruling closs. As article, written by Thorax and published at L'Humanost on 25 April 2040, complessed that French refers, blemed to Putt and Cobourg.* 'only yesterday . . . looked on Hitler and Manuslay in gunderness against the working-class movement in their own country'. The article reflected both the chief strength and the chief weakness of the PCF's propagands; it had a strong care to offer with regard to the past, but it was not very helpful, to say the least, when it came to the averant.

Moreover, the interactions given to PCF members who were called up became vague and even unburuous after the party swinched from a pro-war to a pro-peace stand. Instially, these asstructuous had been quite clear. Communicate were expected to join their regiments and take part in the fighting. For example, Thorax told Aragon, 'You are going to be called up. Do your duty "Later, the instruction to may in the array remained (because one had to be among the people), but the word 'fight' such up a deligrage managing, as can be soon from Thorax's article published in L'Humanus on 17 November 1939: 'The members of the Communist Party are fighting and will go on fighting . They are fighting with all their might against the imperialist wer, for peace, and ensured the Deladur povernment." As for the actual ways at which French Communists were expected to 'facht', they were not spelt out. Again from written and oral propagands, it is unlakely that substage was envisaged, either in the army or in the factories, and this for a pumber of reseme. Furt, it is bard to imagine the party asking its even members to report to the disseaseling of agreed defence when it was accurate, the two hundred femilies' of that very crame. Secondly, et two accomm, " L'Hamanni deponant at "provenzione" the remount that Community contemplated deserting and editional. he has taken up once more his fighting post, is metructed by his party, in the defeace of the pumple. On 17 November the paper carried the text of an inserview given by Thorex is Sam Rissell, the Dody Worker carriagonalism. To the quantum, 'What are you going to do now?, he replied, 'I'm going to continue the struggle with try controls.' He naturally did not my where he was histog. We now know that, after spanding a few weeks to Belgium, he flow to Moscow at the end of November. He retound in the Sevent Union until November 1944, and there is no evidence whetever that he spent my time in Germany, is was mounted by his ensures. 19

For the whole period during which the PCP was illegal (September 1016 to August 1944), the main source of information cuticirinals sit views and activities as L'Humanist, which reoppeared as an underground newspaper as from October 1936. From then cowards, it came out about twice a week, semistance more often. 19 It was edited by Jacques Duckes, who, together with Begort Frackes, lad the party from France. On special occasions, it was printed an Belgium, but generally it was stencified. Forty-six issues appeared during the 'phoney war'. They all advocated 'actoos' agreest the ruling class, but as we have seen, seidom described that action in detail. It contented strelf with several slogues, such as 'Arme against curatalants, against reaction and Hatleman, assume the war of profiteery and facciets!" (po. 2, 26 October 1930), with frequent appeals for 'mosty' and 'mregale', and with no less fragment demands for the release of Communist. deputies and the overthrow of 'the Daladier dictatorship'. How the latter could be achieved was not apelt out.

In addition, one could detect four main thems. The first one was a remander that the party was alive and lucking, a remander which was occasionally accompanied by gran hismour for emaple, the 16 Novamber issue current a report of a factory gate masting at which the PCF speaker, after melting some wager in a glass of waser and making it response by heating the water with a patrel lamp, concluded: 'In the same way, ladies and gentlemen, the dissolution of the Community Party has not made at vanish. It is still in its almost, the working class, and it will lead it in victory ' People were asked to show their support for the party through lutture, putations, and all evaluate liquid channels. They were especially advaned to remain in their unions and to form commutation for the independence and unity of trade unions'

The second theme was the desuncasion of the Franch government, which was accused of 'povern the way for forcion' and even of being itself 'fascist'. The second issue of the paper (mmply deced October 1939) declared that Communates densed 'the men of Musech... the right to speak of sate-function at the vary time when they are introducing funciat methods of appreasans issue France', and the fourth issue (13 November 1939) referred to 'the funciat government of Prance' and to the fact that 'fascism [in] in power in France'. On 18 January 1940 the paper compared France under Dalacher with Germany under Histor:

We to Governmy, Deleding the way arrows the best some of the people.

As in Government, those who do not think like the government are errored. (emphase in the original)

In March 1940, when Reymond exceeded Dalacier to Prime Manister, L'Hammani continued to uttack the government, but asserted that, unlike the deputies who had voted against it (about half the Chumber), it was headed by a man who wanted Ywat, to settle accounts with Germany, and show only, to attack the Soviet Union' (37 March 1940, emphases as the original). A month later, when the stument, Séral, samed his acti-Communité decree, the PCF orang exclusion. 'Serol linerates the Gestage' (10 April 1940), However, descrite the claim that French Community were assured both German. and French fraction, is was arrongly suggested that bringing Hitler down was mainly the German Communities' responsibility, and that the best way these Preach consendes could asset them was by fighting. against their own hourgoome: for example, the 9 May 1940 muse continued an article partied, 'Solut and Communistic Allements', which reported that the Nazas were wormed by the spread of Communist propagated as Garmany, and then added: "We know ... that If it by fighting against our own bourneouse that we can support your own struggle against the German impermint bournsome and at-Hitlerite rulers."

The third theme was 'the war of the rich against the people'. The paper quoted facts and figures to prove that capitalists made profits, whilst the workers worked harder for less pay. The lengthening of the working week (seventy-two hours in nome cases), the various decreas cutting wages, the rise of prices, and the discrepancy between the times imposed on the people and those demanded from the rich, were all betterly attacked by L'Hamarinté, which wrote that the Popular Front game had been destroyed by a ruling class which was bent on petting its revenue on 1936. As wortime conditions were indeed very harsh, this import of Commission propagands was particularly apprecised by workers, pensioners, housewives, by all those who found it difficult to make such most. Its compressively ready acceptance by ordinary people made is a little camer for the party to 'sell' the idea that the war was not 'n people's war'.

The fourth theme was prose for the Soviet Union's 'socialist system' and 'proceful policy', complied with warrangs that the Anglo-Proach ruless were trying to 'pain from stationary wer as the west to acree wer on the USSR', as the 3t Ducember some put at L'Hustaniss also accompted to robut the charge that the Soviet Union had become Histor's ally, clustering united that 'it alone has dealt Histor a string of harsh blows and barred the road to Historian as White Russia, in the Bultic and the Black San' (13 November 1939). Finally, the paper warned that 'working people' would never agree to make war on the Soviet Union, the thartmenth more (samply dated Ducember 1939) reported a Prench heutement-colonel in strying: 'I know my men, they will go over to the Red Army', and commented that the officer was quite right!

The 'phoney war' came to an end on 10 May 1940, when German troops entered Behrum, Holland and Lunemburg. Then began one of the swiftest campaigns in making history. On the 14th the French frost was opened at Sodum, on the 15th Holland surrendered, on the 27th it was Beleasen's turn, on the 14th June the Nazas cuttred Parts. (declared as open city the day before), and on the 17th it was all over as for as France was concerned: Hutler had won, and Pttoin (Revnand's successor as Prime Minister) was using for an attraction. Our chief source of information concerning the PCF during that short but exactal period is using $L^{\prime}H$ measured, of which eleves inside were produced. Unforwagesely, there is a gap between 24 May and 17. June, as issues nos. 45-44 (melastve) are making 24 In the 17 May house, the first one to come out after Hutler's attack, the landang article indicted 'the capitalists' for their pre-war policy of 'appearament', and clasmed that the Fath Column was still 'testect to our commany'. It then went on to say. 'The remoration of peace, the security and independency of our country, freedom and social progress, all request that the government of the 200 families should be ruthlessly kicked aut. . . 1 And at concluded with an appeal for 'peace, breed, liberty and independence. That the word 'independence' was used twice reflected the party's awareness of the threat against France, but the call for neace, equally made (week, did not sound either convencing or practical. On 20 May the paper warned that the bourgeouse and sta-government agency were 'ready to secretice the country's independence provided Hitler continues to guarantee their capitalist privileges. On 24 May it demanded the formetion of 'a people's poverground, relying on the purpolar momes, taking measures against reaction, and reaching an aurospans with the Soviet Usion for the seturn of peace. On 17 June it printed the slogen, 'Workers of all lands, unite', in both French and German, but apart from reporting the grave multary arrastion and repuniting the call for 'a people's. noverment', it made no direct comment. However, on to lune, as the details of the French surrender became known, as leading article. entitled, 'The Community accuse', declared in stakes: Those page are responsible for the defeat have signed the act of capitalistion ... Frenchman, you will have to call those maying street generals to The French people has the right to call those take are responsible for such a disessor to account." On 14 June, under the headling, Building Pance, L'Humaniel wrote that the took of nagotasting 'n just peace' could only be undertaken by a 'paugle's government', not by those who had surrendered to Hitler and those who were will 'the inchess of the Cary of Landon', and it concluded in bold capitals, 'Make way for the people'.

In addition to L'Hamanste, two documents throw further light on the PCF's attatude during the last stages of the war as Prouce. One is a party statement which, according to Thorez, was printed and distrabuted just before the fall of Paris. (It appeared in English in the July 1940 time of The Communist International, but a full retranslation joto French appeared only in the manuaer 1983 more of the Calcurs if Hustows do $I^{\prime}IRM$.) It began by saying that the Frunch people were 'experiencing tranc days', that 's foreign acity [had] burst ions France', and that 'the French imperialists, were 'preparing to capitulose behind the backs of the popple". It went on to index both politicione and generals, the former for having actually belond Germany before the war and refused a Franco-Soviet alliance, and the latter for having agreement the achievements of modern makery technique, especially "the two essential weapons of modern warfare . . . tanks and planes' It compared that 'the French rubog class (had) had ought months in which . . . in organise a real defence of the country', vet had 'waged war, got against the German Army, but against the working class of their own country'. In order to save France from an impending catastrophe, it demanded the adoption of 'exceptional moneyty . . . of a policinal, spend, equipment, mulsissing (emphassed in the original) and organizated character. Finally, the statement plodged that Communicate would remain with their I people', whose specif, it preclaimed, could not be broken by 'trustors, explosiors, plunderers and comparers', and it overted that 'the working class, the people of France [would] never accept foreign distinuation'

The other decement is the list of proposals cent by the PCF fredership to the government on 6 June 1949. These are measured by Thorez as his autobiography²¹ and by Ducios in his Memoirs,²² but the full story behind them is told by Aragon in Lie Communicator 14 He writes that at the end of May, the manager, Anatole de Monzie. approached the PCF scientist, Jacques Solomon, and esked him to find out through his friend, Politier, they stationed as Para, on what conditions the clandestine Community landership would take part fig. a war of a changed character'. The purty responded on 6 June and declared that at two necessary, first, 'to transferny the character of the ther by turning it sate a netronal war for freedom and independency', succeedity, to referee all Communist deputies and other melicines in sul. thereby, to arrest and pursuit all enemy agents; fourthly, to decree without delay a mass mobilisation (levely on marie), and finally, 'to arm the people and turn Pure into an respregnable citade? 44 These proposals never reached the Prizze Manuster bucasse Monzee less has sout after a cabinet reshuffle.

The fact that the only sources available are Constituted sources has led some critics to express doubt about the whole marker. For example, Facret, without actually denying the equipment of the proposite, is remember receptions and argues that the first condition in particular 'to contradicted by the whole of Communion underground increase of that period" 15 lt is not a very convencing argument. First, the attaction was unprecedented ('a foreign army [had) burst into Peance'), to that revenue Pt. F publications are not a sufficient guide. Secondly, Fourset does not seem to be aware of the June statement department. above, which stressed the need for 'exceptional measures', including malisary measures. But even if the party statement was not evaluable to him, he ought to have noticed that I 'Humanuts's tone had altered considerably after the 10th May. Admissedly, the paper continued to call for prece, but the semi-ritual reputition of this call was addly out of place with the demand for a people's government, whose task, incidentally, was to 'impost' peace. * Thirdly, after Hitler's occupation of Holland, Denmark and Norwey, the Companies called on Community to head the struggle for the renovation of national independence? 27 The underground PCF leadership may not have hours at dealy contact that the International, but there is nothing amprobable in the conversions of their views on the anothin stop Hither Fourthly, French Community most have been ewere of the USSR's deplometic moves to amorove relations with France and Botain, for example, its williagness to propriy Pronce with phones of her request and the welcome afforded to Sir Stafford Crooss, the new British ambaseader in Moscow, Finally, Tillon reports that a Commusic delegation tried to reach Herriot on 14 June to sak him if he would head the appointing to surrender, and parrowly escaped arrest. In the light of these facts, it means at least placeable that in June 1940. the PCF briefly consemplated the possibility of changing the character of the war. On the other hand, there is no evidence that the 6 lune. proposals associated to more than 'flying a liste'. Even if we neveronly concede that one of the taining somes of L. Humanuté might have contained the proposals, it is a fact that those which came our after the defeat never referred to them. None of them and, If only we had been beard, this war would have become 's people's war' and France would have won. What they did my was: If only Community had been heard, the country would have been spared the horrors of war and the humalistics of defeat. How this might have impressed with not spelt out, and the magic recipe, as always, was alkanos with the Soviet Union. It may well be that, providely, PCF landers throught that a last-massic agreement with the USSR would have enabled France to wase war under butter conditions, but officially, they could not and did not say so, first because it would have unbarrassed the Seviet government, and secondly, because they would not have been behaved, since no one in those days gver imagined that a French Community distances sometimes was possible without Soviet Messing. And afficially, what was happening behind the accurs is another marrier), the USSR was keen to remain neutral and had not expressed eary wish to suppose Francy in a defensive war assume History

Looking back upon the events related to far, we can see that the PCP's unexampeut of the war until June 1940 went through three stages, which may be seen at a giance in the diagram overloaf.

The sweek from the first stutude (which, socidentally, was also that of the British CP usual Polist was replaced by Palme Dutz as October 1939) is generally attributed to Seviet and Committee pressure, but when and how this pressure was exerted, it is difficult to my In fact, it is not it all improbable that French Community changed

Period	PCF's assessment	Slogans rumming up PCP's stand
September 1939	A war against Hitler, led by a reactionary government	(1) National unity (2) Fight Hitler in earnest (3) Restore democratic
October 1939- May 1940	An imperatus war on both eides; an anti- working-class war; a potential anti-Soviet war	(1) Restore peace (2) Resease imprisoned Communits (3) Alliance with the USSR (4) Form a new government
May-June 1940	Still an imperialist war, but France's independence in threatened.	(1) The 200 families are leading France to disaster (2) A people's government (3) Turn the war into an anti-fascist war* (4) Defend Paris by arming the people*

^{*} These two slogans are found in the PCF: 6/6 proposals exclusively their tune of their own accord, without being ordered to do so, simply because at the end of September the USSR had openly called on all the belligerent states to make peace. It will be recalled that one of the earliest mentions of peace in the PCF's propaganda occurred in the letter sent to Herriot, which specifically referred to the 28 September Soviet-German declaration. Writing in 1979, Jean Suret-Canale, an old campaigner, remarked that "The errors of interpretation committed by the International are undemable, but let us not beap abuse on it! We were quite capable of committing them by ourselves and many of us did so, without in the least being acquainted with its texts. 124 Although the official Cominters line was expressed by Dimitrov, in an article reproduced by L'Humanisé in November 1939, one cannot say whether it had been communicated to the PCF leadership, then driven underground, before that date. Dimitrov's article said that 'the present war (was an amput imperialist war on both ades', but it was much more critical of Britain and France than of Germany, and it ended with a call to the world working class 'to struggle to put an end to this predetery war". The PCF had already come to this varw and probably had done in before being acquainted with Dimitrov's article Among the various factors which fed to its empanion, there was, first, the fact that the 'phoney' character of the war became abvious after British and France had positively watched Poland's colleges without taking military action to prevent it, recondly, the anti-Communist represents in France, which seemed to confirm that 'the Franch impermises' were making war on their own working class rether than Histor; and, finally, the Soviet deplomatic inscincive already manusched.

It is at this last concact that the PCF's attatade was anost strongly open to enticion, even from a strictly Communist point of view, because it was based as the assumption that a move by the Soviet programment was in effect a directive to the whole Communications movement. Now, it would have been perfectly possible to defend the USSR's newtrainty without going to the lengths of preaching the same perstrainty to French Community and democrats. In any case, such a neutrality was plainly impossible: the PCF was not a foreign power, it was part of France, and as such, it simply had to my on which inde of the feace it stood. But it did not. Naturally, it did not my that it was on Hatter's under, but neither did it my explicatly that it was on the ride of the Franch people who wasted to fight against Histor. It was torn between its lovelty to the Consistern and Stales and its lovelty to France. As both were very strong, it was unable to come up with a concrete policy. At no trans, except in its 6 June programis - and thus by amplication only - did it ever my that if a "rest peace" could not be obtained. France should continue the war to mve her independence. What is even more serious, by telking both sides in the wer, "A plague on both your houses', it failed to soprecious where the main danger lay. To declare, so follows had done at his trial, that Community dad not want to become eather Chemberlass's vassals or Hatler's slaves was, at best, as among posture; the risk of becoming Omesburius's "vascale" may have been real, but the threat of analovement by Hutler was undoubtedly more real and much worse. It was not enough to denomics the ruling class for leading the country to defeat without transcript a practical alternative opert from peace.

The anti-factor around of large sections of the Prench people, which the PCP small had helped to crosse, was such that to those, a demand for peace meaned lattle shart of surrender. The weakness of the party's passions had its rest in the four of anti-gonning the Committee. Had ro6 Trials that fully been about, Preach Community much have realised that the CI had 'left out the netronal-liberation tendencies that were present in this war". 20 as the authors of the orthodox Ourline History belatedly conceded. Moreover, when the war started in surness in May 1940, the continued call for peace was so unrealistic that it came deagarously close to political gresponeshelty. Could it be seriously assumed that Hitler, whose armies were traumphastly breaking down all resustance at highrning speed, would have hissened to peace overtures, even if they had been supported by the Soviet Union? Did it recourse great political acustics to realise that the war was no longer 'phoney' but one of their survival for France? Implicitly, all the urgent measures demanded by L'Hamanost in May and June amounted to a demand to change the character of the war. Why not have end as explicatly? The mescapable answer is that this could not be done so long as the PCF stack to the rand Community line that the war was 'emperalist' - without any qualifications.

On the practical aide, the PCF's attirude proved to be a tragic mestake. It offended netronal feelings and it provided the party's ensures with an undreaset-of propagated weapon. In Parlament, Community were accused of being the agents of a foreign power and of having stabbed France in the back. It is difficult to deny that the perty's own stance gave some appearance of credibility to these charges. That the PCF was still note-fascial and was still concerned about France's fate is certain. That largely through its own fault it failed to prove this to people outside at make a equally certain. It is not up to historians to pronounce a final verdict. They can only examine whether any given policy met the requirements of a given situation. One cannot my that the PCPs policy did that, for it was one-wied. Communions were well placed to appreciate the auti-Working-class trend in the war since they had themselves been the chief country. But they were also well placed to know that the people matched more positive elegans than peace and the desuperation of "warmongers" as order to be mobilised against probably incompetent rulers at home and the Nazzs abroad.

Before leaving this some, one must note that the PCP's stand during the war (and also during the years of German occupation) cannot be assessed only in terms of the landership's views and pronouncements. What ordinary members felt and did is equally important, though, of course, much harder to ascertain. However, the few documents available, such as diarras, reminiscences (which appeared later, either in book form or in newspaper articles), and even navels (e.g. Aragon's Les Communistes, already mentioned) can give un come idea of the position. Naturally, all them sources should be approached with great courses, not only because some of them may have been doctored after the event, but also became, as we know, turns can play funny tricks with people's memories. He that so it may, the evidence at our desposal tends to suggest two thence. One is that the leadership's line was generally endorsed, especially during the 'phoney war', mace the denunciation of the suvernment's recommenmountries could be matched by the actual expensence of individual Communists, Secondly, the majority of Communist multings felt great indianation assess the civil and military authorities in view of their approximation to facht Histor in cornect. Their indigention did. not have to be couched in 'diplometic' language, i.e. it did not have to be accompanied by the reminder that the war was 'impension on both uder', particularly in May-June 1940. For, as soon as the blitcheseg. started, the chief preoccupation of the Community who were in the armed forces was to try, together with other patriotic soldiers, to resist the Germana, irrespective of the fact that they were given no lead by most of their commanding officers. One cannot say that the militants' behaviour commedicaed the party lane, but it was certainly not marred by the official call for peace, which the leadership maintained to the very end.

Piret year of Occupation (June 1946-June 1941)

The June 1940 defeat created a new actuation, characterized by the country's accupation (the acquirelly 'free some' cannot to exact after 1942), the setting up of Pition's Vichy regime (which was ratified by Parlament, with the encaption of some eighty votas), the beginnings of the in-called Revolution Nationale (a mixture of authoritarianum and altegody Christian values), and the French people's physical and psychological enhancem. The last point was initially very important about the million soldiers and civilians had find as the Gormans advanced through Prince, and in the first few months after the defeat their chief processpations were food, which was strictly retinaed, employment and shelter, which were both hard to get, and finding their friends and relatives. Roger Bourderon sums up the situation by saling, 'What to think, how to think is such circumstances?' The PCF was deeply affected by the general collapse, although it was the only pre-war political party which managed to heep some sort of existence. On 30 December 1940, the Desly Telegraph correspondent noted that 'Polyncal sentument to m a state of flux, the only party still equiting, though flagally, being that of the Community, and over 1,000 of them were erremed last meash. They are detributing anti-German tracts with a strong appeal to Prench patrictic sentunent 'Instally, the sucleus around which the party reorganised street in Purn amounted to a mere 180 to 200 people 33 The empossibelsty of having lengthy political ducumons, let glone of holding cusgreates, encouraged both discipling and instative. In 1980 Heart Jourdan wrote: "In one way, I was never more desciplined in relating to the lendership's derectives. . . . vet, in enother, i never had to make to many sermoni decreases. 133 As a chardretent organization, the PCF had to be recreamed to such a way that measurem recently was achieved. The hanc party unit was a group of three people, in which the leader alone knew who the other two work, and kept in much with the next party link, the cell, which was made up of three groups. Sections and fedframens were countineed on the same bean, and all higher bodies were led by a "landership transfe" - our pursus in charge of propaganda, another in charge of political work, and a third in charge of man work. All activines were directed by the C.C., most of whose members were in Paris. Party members were encouraged to work in legal bothes, such as trade unions, and in the carly days, only a manority - those who belonged to military bodies - led an underground contence.

The political difficulties were as strong as the organizational ones. In particular, two factors accounted for the PCF's early confusion and metakes. One was its own recent condemnation of the 'imperialast war", and the other was that Vachy and the occurrent had not yet shows their hand. However, the Vichy regime was manufactely described as 'rotten' (as L'Humanuté of 7 July) and as made up of 'trascers and rebbers' (in L'Humanist of 13th). That the Germans were not attacked until later has led boutsle critics to meet that the PCF did not beaut to fight them before June 1941, when the USSR. entered the war. We shall see presently that this assertion is not beene out by the evidence, but the party's insul blunders may have helped to accredit it. The first of these blanders was the slogan of 'Frattrainstion' which was carried by the first sames of L'Humanist summediately. after the protestace. Although there was no mention of 'Franco-German brotherhood' at government level, the alogan was angularly fauspieced, and it was soon dropped, soonbly after the paper and the hadership had received spirited presons from purry members. **

A second, more serious, grear was the monopolog which the leaders they assens to have ensergered for a short while that the Natio much allow the party to function 'wwo-leasily'. A: Reen makes much of a secret instruction which he classes was sent to 'treated manchess' at the end of June, and which forecast equal mortalizedy in it turned out) that the Name would make demanage attempts to 'use' the party, adding that, at each circumstances, Community should be ready 'to ally [thomsolous] - temporarily - with the devil himself. M This list phrase a interpreted by Rome at great that the PUF had torout 'collaborationist', but most from the fact that the document may not be necessar. "A one must point over, first, that newbore due in PCP. documents are the Gormans over described as 'temperary tilhes', and arcondly, that the word collaborationer' applies to those who gave full support to the Name, practically and alcologically, which the PCP never did. Provet points out that ' contrary to what has of the basis americal, the rather short-nighted appartunisms never hads to my kind of "cullaboration" with the Garmane, the latter are not combitted, but (hereby agential. Or outlier, there is a greatence of agnoring them . . . 137.

A third manake was the suggest musty to the German authorities towards the end of June to allow legal publication of L Humanite. The negotiations (which larged a few days only) were conducted by Manrice Tream and from Catetas, both CC members, by Donne Guallin, then active in the Communist Youth Movement ([C), and by a party lawyer, Federal, The most pagestage grove was a visit good by Treased and Caselan to Otto Abetz on 26 June, which was followed by a letter they sear ham, asking him to allow the legal publication of L. Humanuss 'on the more form under which it appeared to its rendere before it was banned by Daladar . The bence recalled that Communate had been against the war and had been preserved for that stand. Finally, it piedged that L'Homorais would describe 'British unpersation' (adding, however, that it would also call as all enforces to fight for their spdryandance, and that it would campaign for 'a income peace', to be achieved by a Pranco-Seviet pact, which would be the complement of the Soviet-Coronia succi. The augustations proved absertive because the Gormans anickly surfined that they would not be able to central L. Humanust. About decided instead to breach another daily. Le Proper an Travail (with which Fouris) eventually collaborated), to which he eleverty gave the same format us rio Trials

L'Humanité, and which he presented as an organ of the 'revolutiomay loit'

It is a puty that for many years after the war, the PCF tended to here oues about the whole affair, but such evanveness disappeared in the 1970s and the incident is no longer decord by curry landers and gurty historians. 16 There is no reason why it should be, made the proceding account reads to show that the mistake should senther be graphed out of all proportion nor under-astument. There was never any quantion of L'Humanist becoming a pro-German paper, and Forvet reports that Denise Guncilla, acting on Treand's unitractions, informed the German that, whilst the Communications would not call for 'trots', at would 'not corve Garman assertats in any way'  The move must be seen as a tectocal one, well as heaping with Communist. practice (duting back to Lenus and the Comintorn) of making sist of all "logal possibilities". On the other hand, it was a serious quantiles, first, to assume that the Germans would respond (avourably (on the ground that their part with the Soviet Union had anmehow lessened their gots-community), and accordly, to overheak the fact that the appearance of L'Humanusi with German blemag would crease a lot of confusion. Whether the whole PCF leadership (or even the CI) was involved, we do not know. Two PCP pographets, Crimeray and Enterer, owers that Triand acted on his own sustantive, but another Construent, Pierre Vallog, suggested as his posthumous memours that Triums and received instructions from higher (unnamed) bodies.  What is certain is that Ductor and Practice later condemned the move and that Forms was subsequently expelled. No further approach was made to the occupying authorities, although L'Humanies continued to demand the right of legal publication, but this time as a fighting efcoso.

Apart from L'Humanité, the most important PCF documents in tues are the 10 July Appeal, the November Lemm to Communité maisteurs und the CC Mangleste of the some month. Much tak has been spat over the first one, both by Communits, who initially asserted that it was 'the first set of Remitigier on French soul, and by non-Communits, who maintained that it was nothing of the sort. The controversy is practically over now, as modern PCF historians acknowledge the Appeal's landstonic. According to Duckes, it was dated so July to concide with the last meeting of Parlament, but in new copies of it were being printed over a period of three mouths, a few additions were made from time to time in the light of current.

developments 41 The signatories were Maurice Thorax and Jacquin. Ducies, and it is not at all unlikely that the former was consulted before the final draft was ready. Half a million copies were destributed. by means of illegal leaflets. The Appeal is made up of a Prescrible and of seven sections. The Prescrible mentions the 'humiliation' of foreign accupation and adds in capitals that 'France should belong to the French' and that workers express 'the will for independence of a whole secole. The first section is a vandacating of the party's recent policy, contrasted with that of the ruling clear which waged war on the people and debburstely betreyed the country. The second section ductions that France wants to be from that it resects 'the Vichy adventurers', and that 'never will a great people such as ours by a people of slaves. The third section take, 'Who, then, can put France. back on her feet?', and seewers that 'it is with the people that the great hope of national and social liberation rests'. It adds that it is around the working class, 'guided by the Community Party', that 's front can be built for freedom, managemente and the reburth of France'. The fourth section demands measures such as the nationalisation of key sectors and a check on war profeteers. The fifth section is made up of political demands, chiefly the supplement of 'those who counti-France's present tragedy' and the remoration of democratic freedoms. The math section calls for a 'genuine peace', which is ead to be inseparable from France's undependence. The seventh section calls for the formation of a 'people's government', and of popular committown', both in the workplaces and in the localities.

In the light of the above minimizery, one may conclude that the Appeal shd not actually mention 'resistance' to the Gormans (as a came to be understood later), but, that although its closel target was Vichy, at had anti-Gorman connotations. Otherwise, the eloquent atreas on independence would have been minimized. What was minimized was an indication of how such independence might be won back, and if the Appeal was alent on this issue, it was, partly, but only partly), because its authors still clung to the view that the war was 'imperialist on both index', and partly, because, it that only stage, military resistance on a serious scale could hardly be envisiged on French and (De Gualle's famous appeal of till Jame did not mention it either for these who were still in France, mice it called an particus to join him in England or carry on the fight in the colonies.) This list point does not provide an excuse for the PCF hadership's one-sidedness, but it helps to remand us that the real state of affairs immediately after France's crushing defeat should also be botton to mand. Mareover, it is worth noting that many ordinary party members read the Appeal as an encouragement to curry on with their lang-exanding anti-fascist struggle. In this respect, there was some discripancy between them and their leaders, but to speak of a clash, is tome critics staggest, is probably excaseive. It is safer to assume that, anitally it any rate, the leadership was more controls in its public pressurements. The coution gradually disappeared as the party got more involved in the light against the occupants.

The Lotter to Community molitants was also ugged by Thorez and Duclos, because these two senses symbolised unbroken Communist. handarship. It describes the Petain-Laval government as one which is protected by 'Gormen beyonets', and the 'National Revolution' in a grammar because at in really 'reaction imported from abroad'. After declarang that France should not fight for either Britain or Germany, it concludes with the remark that the PCF is estacked by both Vichy and the Nazio, which proves 'the blackstutedmin' (In constillate) of those who had accused it of beans pro-German. Rossi's sourtion that the authors of the Latter 'are very happy that France should have been defeated' is based on an incomplete quotation. The letter does say that 'a powerful imperiaham has been overshrown' and that 'those who were in the habit of waging war by presty are compelled to fight directly' (as reported by Roos), but after this obvious reference to France and British, there is a no less obvious reference to the Nazas: Those who were relying on highering docume victories most start all over again at the very time when they thought that it was all sertled." The CC Manufacto, after saying that France had become 's lund of German protectorate', outlines the Community shermarive - 'n propie's government' which would liberate the national terrstory, establish friendly relations 'with the German puople', sign a pact with the USSR, petionalise big firms, and build a new democracy

From party documents let us pass on to party activity. First, there was the formation of popular committees, as these provided the best apportunity for the party to be close to the people and regain its software. They were means to take up any must, however trivial, around which opposition to the regime outld be built, but the most important were those are up in the factories with the sim of ensuring food supplies and of fighting against unemployment. Secondly, there was the stocking of arom and the laying of the material basis for future termed resistance. Although the forms this resistance would eventually take were not, and could not be clear at the time, the CC seat secret matricesons to militants in recover arms (chiefly those left by the recreating French army) and to hide them. The punishment in case of discovery was death, and at least one Community had to pur that supreme penalty. If evidence of this aspect of party activity is not found in the PCF's own publications, for obvious reasons, there is no dearth of information in the lensi press and in the reports submitted by local government officials. For example, the swifet of the Aube departement wrote that 'the Communist Party has organized the collection of arms abandoned by the French army over all the terrstory' 44 It soon became clear that PCF propagandists and activists seeded military protection to carry on their work, and it was as order to provide them with such protection that armed groups were not up. first in the Paris erm, and leter in the north. By the outsing of 1940, all these groups were brought together into an Organisation Specials (OS), which eventually became a proper army of the interior and took. the name of Franci-Turners at Partisant⁴¹ (FTP). Reports sent by Gestapo officiale confirm the emitence of these 'shack-groups of an toeight men whose task as to provide a regular service of observation and Orotectosis* 44

As the Germans gradually gave up their pretence of attarality and "korreletness" by arresting all protesters and by shooting a few of them, the PCF began to make calls for sabotage. Such was the mood among the working population that in some factories these acts of sabotage took on a massive character. Moreover, trains carrying food to Germany were often derailed. One of the first actions undertaken by the OS was the cutting of telephone cables used by the occupiors. In March 1942 the Januari d'Amasiu temarked that 'order' was manufacied by the German army, and it anxiously saked, 'But what about

The PCF was also active on the political and ideological fronts. In October 1940 it immed a Lester to a Security morker, of which 200,000 copies were distributed, ascerting that Communists wanted many with the Socialist runk-and-file, even with these who had swill-lowed 'the warmongers' moults' against the PCF. As for the Socialist landership, the quanties of reaching agreement with it hardly grove, make the SF1O had practically collapsed, on 10 July, most of its deputies, but by Paul Foure, had voted for Petries, with only therty-emissioning to do so and air abstancing. It was only much inter that the Socialist party reconstituted stack, thanks to Blum and Daniel Mayer, by the creation of two Socialist Action Committees, one in the north and one in the south. (The two mergod is 1943 and elected Mayer as the enceutive's accretary.) In Ducember 1940 the PCF published a Latter to a Radical working man (the word used was meta-cillour, which is breader than awarser), which appealed to the passants' and maddle classes' patriotism. Finally, despite the support gives to Person by the Catholic increreity, the Communists noted with unufaction that a lot of Catholics hated the Naza, and the policy of Is many available was revived.

Turning new to the battle of ideas, two auti-Nais brocharts disserve to be meanward. One was Politzer's Réponse à Sang et Or (February 1941), which answered Rosenberg's clean that the Naise were waging the buttle of 'blood versus gold' by arving that they were in fact ensloving other nations. The other was Peri's Now, is maximum n'est par le socialisme (April 1941), which sweeted that it was 'a betrayal of nocialism' to allow France to become 'a protectorate of Nais Germany'.

In May 1941, the PCF brunched the 'National Front of struggle for Prance's undependence'. The CC moved a statement which still referred to the need for peace, but added that the struggle for peace west hand at hand with the structle assist petional oppression. Then the statement outlined a programme around which national unity could he built. This included the withdrawal of occupation troops, nationalization of monopolies, and democracy. It stressed that in the Front National, there was room for 'all French people of good will', with the exception of 'marrender-mongern lies caparalands' and transers', and it piedeed PCF support to 'eay French government, any organization and any individual' that was fighting against notional oppression. In some of this, however, de Guille cause in for some criticisms. Although he was no longer described as an 'agent of British imperation', his movement was said to be 'in the mage of British propersistant, and six suspension, was estacked as 'reactionary and ectoration. Co-operation with Gouldens was not ruled out in in manny words, but it was stressed that national liberation could not be achieved under its leadership. Commenting on the CC's statustive, L'Humanité wrote that its aux was to prevent Prance from becoming 'a Naza colony'. The Proof National was destined to play a crucial role in the Reinstance.

Finally, mention must be made of the May-June 1941 miners' strake, the most operacular ages-Nam mass action before June 1941

The immediate curve was accurated (starvation wayers), but it soon took on a pointed character. The movement was 'manually apportunation and rash'," but when Communist multimate stepped in, they wave ship to provide organization and landershap. The best known were Machel Brute and Augume Lecoeur. "Malazary prosection for the strakers was provided by OS units, led by two Communists, Debarge and Capel. As many in 100,000 maners struck, and by doing so, they deprived the Germans of helf a milition took of cost. On no June L'Humannar hashed the strike as proof that 'the occupation cannot stop the working class from acting in support of its demands'. The PCF CC congratulated the maners, and Debarge wrote in his Nationals that 'the Germans should understand that the working class has not ugand an act of surrender with the accupant."

The PCF's record during the June 1940-June (44) period has been variously amended. The most houtile account counts from an en-Consistern official, Amalcare Rosal, who charges French Community with 'defeations' and bland following of Moncoo. It is a puty that his books, which contain a wealth of information, should rely on relective documentation and abouid by marred by policical betred, bordering at tunes on hymeric." More balanced assessments may be found in the studies of Feavet, Teachard and Negatives. Facest draws attenues to the party's esturn to esti-fractors. "Fauti-fractions retrooms"." to from October 1940. The late Josa Touchard, a scholar with a deservedly high reputation, rejects the charge of 'cellaboration' and credate PCF members with 'many acts of individual resistance and even of collective resistance at a local level before June 1941' 49 (Incidentally, in the first year of occupation, all new of realizance were either and/vidual - because of poor communication - or local. Naturewide resonance, whether Communist or not, did not start until the Nazis withdrew many of their troops to fight on the maters front) Fatally, Henry Nogueres, the most rehable historian of the Remotance, owerts that there is enough evidence to show that Commissions started to fight the Germans well before June 1941, and that to deny this is either "to err our of agnorance" or to display 'assains aparadary' ('discountr') 10 He ownersion that, so view of its characterisation of the war as 'imperator', the PCF was in an 'incomfortable pontion', but he adds that 'this discomfort (was) due precisely to the existence of a permits Constraint Renatorics' 11 A Resistance, he impate, that that co-ordinated by the party centre bucunes otherwise the actions of underechant Communities would have had neigher meaning per affec116 Trials tivaness. That the whole issue restrant controversed is shown by the fact that one of Nogukrus' two collaborators, J. L. Vaguer, dangeon with him and maintains that individual Constituest sensiters were at odds with the lendership. 13 As for the PCF's own minerations of its second, it reached for a long time to be defensive and apologetic, but in 1979-80 Communist historians and and ordinary unistants displayed a refreshing willingness so enamine the period more critically and to mention the party's martides as well as its achievements. 13

"Le parti des fesilée"

On 23 June 1942 Hitler eracked the Soviet Union. In France the Remotunce grew to become a force which had to be rechoned with. For Community, there was of course the fact that 'the messian motherland was in danger', but also, for them as well as for others, that the copportunities were so much greater made Germany had to fight on two fronts. Although Higler still achieved a number of bistabase wetories, his ornaes did not enter Moscow, and for the first time, did not some invencible. Well might the Psench Rodrigue my to the powerful German Counts, 'Tom bres est inverincu, mais non par invincible'. As tone at grees of the aggression became known, on an June mach. L'Humanné pointed out that many Gurman soldiers had boun removed from France, and added: 'Why should we not take advantage of thes? From then on, the PCF therw all sts forces age the bottle, and soon it partied for steelf the suckname of parts des fursi-Mr.,  because so many of its members were shot by the Name. It is impossible to asburanciate the one-time claim that 75,000 Communarts perwhed, but the number of PCF victims was very high, probably higher than that of any other single group or party.

The first abox (inerally) was fired in Paris by Fabien, a Communist, who killed a Garman officer in broad daylight on 33 August 1941. A week later a Garman NCO was shot down. In September four around partients out first to a factory that was working for the Nazie offer making ourse that all its workiers had been evacuated to safety. In the weeks and mouths which followed, around attacks and acts of substage became regular occurrences, especially in Paris, in the north and all along the coast. By the end of 1941, the generals fighters were in a position to more regular communiques suporting the number of Germania killed or wounded and the amount of war material destroyed, damaged or captured. In February 1942 the somewhat loose organisms of the OS had become obsolete, and the PCF ducated to bring all the gentile groups regether and form them use companies which were eranged on stricter distincy limit. Thus the OS became the Prency-Toronte at Participate (FTP), in the number of coas the party called as all payrous to join the new 'army' and pledged that its own numbers would reall as make. Throughout the war, the FTP ware hed and largely manned by Communers, but the movement was not analoged to them. The best: F I P was one constructed by two fourmen source, each led by a leader who along had lanks with other trusts and with regional and manufal HQs. As in the case of the party sholf, the east was to combine distinguish efficiency with maximum socurity. In midstant to around attacks, the FTP, take the O3 from which they had coroug, provided maletary presecutes, especially in workers who reseased forcehir transfer to Germany. This transfer had started in Secondary road, though it was only in Pobradry road that it formally business the Service on Prevent Obligations, STOs. The PTP pothote help from the women after and from de Guntle, both of whom time assessment of Rate', and on the whole, they had to ruly on the grow they had captured or made themselves.  The FTP leader was Charles Tallon, a Community who had fought on Soom

The Name' raply to FTP activities was to shoot homages, non-times on many as fifty for a single Gorman volder billed. Hostoges were also that as an answer to enhance, even if as loss of ide had been accurred. The counties Communious who were control generally may both the Marapillanar and the Internationals before they dod, and they managed to thous 'Long leve France, fong leve the PC Pl' A great many added, 'Long leve the U.S.S.R., long leve Stains' Our of those, Jean-Pierre Tumboud, thousand, 'Long leve the Gorman Communist Purty' A few managed to have firewell manages (Steard, Discourt, Pter, which expressed their curtainty that the Name would be bestern.

In May 1945 Ductor reasoned up the PCP's pulsey in the stages, Funer - p'arrays - so home, and he spall out its political againstance by writing in L. Humanise that France had to liberate humal in writer to men the right to control by own destinant after the war. On this man, the PCF chicked with de Gaulle, as will be seen. In September 1945 a PCF inspired move was the creation of molecus patrioriques. These, unlike the FTP a permanent quictary organisation), were made up of armed cretions where task was to harve the enemy and complement the FTPs work. In May 1944 a Central Council of Prayance Malman on-ordanised their accretion. 118 Trais

It must not be thought that the PCF found it easy to win over the majority of the people to the concept of armed straight. In fact, at had to wage a tough bottle on this space. The chief appropriate used against it. was that it brought harsh repressit from the Name, and Vichy inhoused that point in its propagands. For a while, even de Gaulle advant totages and restrant uptal the western allow came to the seacue. That was sucknamed attentioner (wast-end-oot tectics). The PCP's answer was given in L'Hamanist of 14 March 1942. "If we den't set agrees the Boches, they will make us all the little by little, some through starvetten, same to gools, and some as hostages. You, it is better to fight in order to destroy the agency rather than allow enseed to be kalled by him." To the accumation of 'turrersum', the purty repland that the real spreames were the Name, who shot annount hostages. When Georges Politzer, arrested in 1942, was asked by the German officer interrogating him if he knew the names of 'terrometr', he replied, 'Yes, I do. The two gramest terrorats operating in France are Stillanged and Petron' However, even many Constitutions, there were enopyings about ermed expegler had not the party always condemned radividual serverses? The leadership replied, first, that 'the whole Party most get ready for armed struggle', secondly, that the actions of statevaluely and small groups were but the prejude to mess action, and finally, that if many deeds had to be curred out individually, they were all part of a collective strategy.

Despete its emphasis on malicary incusation, the PCF did not neglect some-exposurer, political and ideological strangles. Non-Communists wood to regard the former as trivial, but the party manted that they were important. In September 1943 L'Humanisi urand French women to demand a manufactor bread ration of 900 grammer per day, and added. 'A group of 200 mothers demonstrating estade the town ball, a workshop going on surke in order in get bread, . . our battle plate, which the starvetion-moneous of Vichy dreed. There fact our strength." One should also note that a Communist victory in the trade union movement was that in April 1943, the CGT readmitted the makeants at had expelled in 1936. Politically, the PCP's most important contributions were its role in creating the Front National and in helping to create the National Resistance Council. Of the former, Forvet writes that 'This bread claudestine alliance, popular and patriotic, is . . . one of the "great" remaining movements in the accurrent man, it will man make its presence felt in the morthern man. Two man, two Community, are so leaders. In Paris, Parry Valley, in Lyons, George Marrane '* Hvm the FTP, under the leadurable of mother Community, Charles Tillon, came under the Front Managad's using although in practice, they were autonomous. As for the Comeni Manorasi de la Résistance . CNR), et cume seto boung m May 1945. The tradication of all resultance groups had been reportedly arged by the PCP, but unreally, de Goulle was lukewarm. liventuativ, he resisted that the formation of a angle Resistance body. would half two bords with one more. It would enable him to check the Community and to enjoy greater authority in during with Britain and the USA. The latter closely evalued that even man to take ever in eccupied florege, and to this effect they had set up at Athed Maktary. Government of Occupant Tarretorius (AMGOT). De Goulie rightly throught that an AMGOT administration would arrive unaccessary to his country if there was a large at France which was, to all interest and surmons, a provincest accurament. However, long accommons were graphed before the CNR was finally formed. The Guellest delegate, Jean Moulin, bagan by demanding that the Front Namonal and the PTP be disbunded, but later, in units of de Goode's week, he had to give in on that putor, and he surrend that all military groups, including the FTP, would be represented without loung their separate absoluty. Bysecually, the C.N.R. was made up of all those groups, of all enti-Garman polyment purchas. PCP, 5 P1O, Radicals and three simplfor ease), of the main trade amount (CGT and CFTC, the Christian confederation), and of a representative from de Goode's French Nessonal Communics. In Murch 1944 the CN R adopted a programme of post-war secusi and polyacel referent which appealsed at particular the namenalization of membership, the right to work, a decent manatatum wage for all, a Houlth and Survai Society survice, drusscrotic rights for the colonies, and a reform of education. The CNR programme become the official programme of France's first post-war gericelinients.

Two other events further helped the PCF to build the national utility which it never count to advocate on the ground that it was independable for victory. One was the dissolution of the Committees, proposed by the ECCI prevalent in May 1943 and implemented in June. Although the discount to dissolve the Communer contra was postified both by the greater maturity of CPs and by the great differences among them, the timing of this move was also stressed. Thereis, who stressed Matuchity's resolution, and that dissolving the Committee would bely to wides the necessariant factor front in France' The other event was the unification of all military resistance groups in February 1944, which took the name of Forces Françaises de l'Intériour (FFI) The national HQ was ind by Malloret-Jourville, a Communit, and it was another Communit, Pierre Villon, who hended the military committee set up by the CNR under the name of Commit Militaire d'Across (COMAC).

Trals Trals

The stress on national unity - the PCP's central slogan throughout the Resistance period - as unserpressed by many non-Communist critics as attenuating from the party's week to make a united France a reliable ally of the Soviet Umon. The explanation of Community policy or Moscou-inspired is, so usual, too facile to be entirely introfactory. We have already seen that (before the recent emergence of 'Eurocommunicant) all CPs regarded the USSR's interests as being complementary to those of their own countries and took them into account, but as one factor only, admirtedly an important one. Moreover, the disentangling of motives is always a tricky business. Whatever the PCP's real motives were - which we have no way of knowing - its leadership rostified the national unity policy on strictly French. and Margatt grounds. The French grounds were that the country's hburation rectured a petional insurrection, a view which de Goulle humself - whosever has morroes - also endorsed. The Margast grounds were that the class struggle had taken on a national character, the most enemy of the French working class, German fascum, was also the enemy of the French aution. It was therefore both possible and necessary for a working-class party to focus at attention on national tenty in the procondition for a successful national insurrection. The party also made the point that a national insurrection could not lead to a return to tre-war conditions; it would lead to a 'new democracy'. involving for-reaching social and polyncal changes. That this was not a pious wish could be seen, the PCF argued, from the advanced character of the CNR's programme, to which all its members were commercial.

However, the PCF also thought that within the Resistance, the class struggle had nor vanished, since the movement included 'exploiters' as well as 'exploited', but that it was largely waged around assues which were connected with the conduct of the national struggle. The most important of these towers were whether partitions should kill Germans or not, whether laboration should existe from imade or from cuturds. On the firm two sauces, the PCF believed that its methods were more readily accreased by the working class and the people because they relied on popular autorive and asychometat, whereas they were frowned upon by de Goulle and the western alies (both 'bourseau') for proceedy the same reason. The third saver was the most controversal of all because the Communits, on the one bond, and the Gaulhan and the Anglo-Americans, on the other, had different political philosophies and different post-war size. The PCF worked for Prance's own bherston to that her fugure government should not owe at existence to the Ashen, with the result that the party would have a lending role to it in view of its Reminance record. It did not, however, expect to hold power alone, and was not even planting to do so stace it was preparate a national, and a projetation unwirection. Whether its fundare secretly happed that a 'progressive' governseent would quickly make way for a socialist our is not uncounble, but that could only be music for the distant future. As for de Gaulle, his son was that a regular French army should help to free Frence, so that a regular government headed by humanif could take over. Finally, the western governments were empicious of both the Communists and do Gualle, of the first because they were friends of Russia, and of the latter because he was too undependent, and they gave up their AMGOT plans only when they had no option.

Finally, in the cultural and identifying field, the PCP's policy was to arvolve antellectuals in the bettle assure Nazzani, In 1943 it was instrumental in bracine about the Counté National des Ecrevaises (CNE), a body which writers of all varue were invited to total. Many of them dad, stickeding Sortie, Comes and the Catholic Francous Mourier, who were active in it, and Valery and Duhamal, who supported at Las Laures Princauses, founded by Jeogram Decour, and admed by Aragon after Ducour had been arrested and shot, published. articles, posses and stories by France's landom writers. A manifectat sumber of intellectuals decided to join the PCF. The most famous was the physicist, Johnt-Curse, and the poet, Eluard, who was in fact returning to the fold, a close sign that both he and the party had changed. Picasso was close and jouned in October 1944. Together with those who were shready Communists, these newcomers contributed to the cultural Resustance, a movement as amountant in its own right in malitary Remanace. Among the pupiers, one must mention (in addition to Picasso) Mature and Jean Lurcet; among the short mory writers (all the stories had a strong app-Next content). Areans and his wife. Blue Traciet, although the was never normally a party member.

Trials Trials

But price of place must go to the poets, Aragon, Eward, and others, because poems could be perced from hand to hand and learns by heart is a also worth noting that the PCP's intellectual activities included publication and distribution of the Marxim classics, a more distinct by the wish to provide new members with stronger runous to runous in the party than their involvement in the Resistance, supervised though that was.

The PCF and de Goatle

The relations between the PCF and de Gamille require separate treatment because they illustrate remarkably well the double aspect of the party's policy smoot 1941, namely, waging the struggle against Garmap faccion first, but also – and, in the Communic view, because of this – waging the struggle within the Resistance. The latter might be termed the occordary class struggle, but it was, from the PCP's point of view, inevitable and important. It was inevitable because the "hourgeome", even if some of its sections are patriotic, has different interests from those of the working class; it was supportant in order to tenmer that the main class struggle against Hitler faccions should result in a struggleman of the French working class and 'ste party'

Although the Free French Committee, set up is London under de Gosde's leadership in September 1941, was attimediately recognised by the Soviet Union (and much lazer by Britain and the USA), the PCF tended to agrave de Gaulle until April 1942. L'Hamanuté often. another of the ascessory unity between 'Goullists' and Communists, but at did not refer to the peneral humanif because, as we have seen, he was instally bostale to internal resistance and to the shooting of German. soldness. However, on 18 April 1942 he declared that 'astronal liberation cannot be reparated from national mourrection", which was, word for word, the PCP's own formula. Both sides then felt the need for a tupprochament, despute their mutual suspicions of each other. In January 1943 the PCF sant Fernand Gremor to represent it on the London Commune, and de Goulle welcomed the move by writing to the CC that he now this as further proof of the Communicat Will to contribute to the liberatum of our country. A month losse, he again wrote to the party, saving that "Commounts play a major role in the Resistance'. Despite these gestures of good will, the new PCF-Guallist co-operation did not put an end to closhes between the two "alber" In a way, the severse happened, because dangeouthenes were no hanger argued about up a general polemacal way, to ecore points so it were, but became part and parcel of the debates concerning the working out of joint day-to-day tactics.

Events in North Africa provided apecial opportunities for cooperation as well as for clashes. After the Alked landing on $ November 1943, it had been boosed that a provinceal French. government would be set up to Algeria, which was technically part of France However, British and the USA preferred to deal with Darlan, Petain's envoy, whose they put in charge. Both de Goulle and the Communion voiced their manyanes. When the Germans occupied the whole of France on 11 November, on the present of 'sovme' her from Anglo-American invasion, again de Gaulle and the PCF reacted. in the same way: the general pointed out that the Pétain government had lost all classes to independency, and L'Humana's wrote that 'the Vichy clique' had suck 'even deeper into dishonour'. On 27. November, the acuttime of the French fleet at Toulos to prevent it from being taken over by the Germans drew prame from both Goulhote and Communica, On Christmas Eve Darian was assessment. and the Allies appointed General Guraud (who was senior to de Goulle). as High Commissioner. De Guide was auturally increased, and the PCF contionaly appeared here. In June 1943 the Cometé François de Libération Nationale (CFLN) was set up, with de Gaulle and Gerand as joint presidents. The CFLN was in effect a provisional povernment, and it took that name in lune 1944, but it was not recognised as such by the western albes. Only the USSR acknowledged it as 'the representative of the state interests of the French Republic'. On 17 September, the CFLN set up a Consultative Assembly in Algoris in which all shades of opinion were represented, tichidus the Communists. In November Ground returnd, and de-Gaulle was left in sole control. The way lay open for the PCF to enter the CFLN

Although the party was faced with the hastoric choice of joining what was in effect a government, it did not show the reluctance at had displayed in 1936. De Gaulle, however, proved difficult, not because he did not want the Communion but because he instead up maintaining his own ministers united of morely accepting those whom the party delegated. The conflict lasted a few months, but it was finally resolved with the help of a compromese: on 4 April 1944, two Communious joined the provisional government, one was de Camille's own choice, Perunnel Grenser, who became Communious, who became Community is not the party's non-mee, François Balloux, who became Com-master of State. Ironically, the most serious clash occurred between de-Goulle and Grenour. It was caused by the Vercors tragedy. The Vercors magnet in Haute Savoie was not a Communist group, but a Goulest one. In June 2044 st was ordered by Sousselle and Pussy (two of the asparal's man) not to leave its base in order to attack but to stay. gut and wast. Unfortunately, the Germans did not wait, and after sterrounding the area with greatly superior forces, they easily defeated the Vercors magnesards, 750 of whom died. From Alesers, Grenier had tried to send an air aquadron, but he could not get de Gaulle's signature in time. When he learned what had happened, he called a press conference, in the course of which he stated that he dissociated hannelf from this attentione, which he called in crime against France'. On the same day, he seat a letter to de Gaulle. The general was furious and demanded withdrawn) of the letter and an end to all public criticisms. After a hurried consultation with Billoux, Grenier bowed down, and so was kept in the government. Fauvet remarks that the party 'merificed its convictions on the alter of source secrets'. 31 A fair comment, but perhaps the use of ususu sacrie was a trifle uncheritable.

Time P.C.F. and Persons Inches

The PCP's role in Prance's liberariou is linked to its views about the national assurrection. According to the Communicate, the saucrection had to be independent in relation to the Albed unlitary operations and g had to mychye both nulstary and non-multary action. The first supert carried as a consequence that the timing did not depend on that spend of Anglo-American advance, but as Le Vie du Parts put it in August 1944, 'on the balance of forces between the enemy and the space of patriots'. In such uses the local population had to decide whether the assumes was favourable or not, and there should be 'unail mobile units, countiess and charve.' The second aspect mount that the mearrection, as viewed by the PCF, should be a popular uprising, combining makery action and other forms of struggle (in which the melices pervecious had a crucial role to play), all convergand on an arrived uprising. The Gauliuts condemned the militate at 'arregular bodies', and de Goulle suspected that the Community were tuning them to strengthen their own influence. On the issue of military operations, Gaulists and Communists frequently clashed. For example, after the opening of the Second Front, the Goulbit Chaban-Deletes told COMAC that France should show her independence in the political ophers, 'whilst displaying strict deceptine in the melitary aghere", a statement which has between understood as meaning that there should be no military action before orders to this effect had been issued by the Albes and the French curtiler forces. They replied that independence had to be won in action. De Gaulle counser-charged by saying that 'gueralla activines', as he chose to call them, were unnecesserv since regular forces could be trusted to defeat the enemy. He privately felt that they were also politically disbesse same they enabled the Continuous to play a landing role which they were tare to emploit Inter. For these renenes, General Koenar, whom de Gualle had put at charge of co-ordinating the actions of the PPI with the Albeit plans, cent the following instruction on 14 June: "Slow down to the utmost, repeat down down to the utmost grantle activities." The COMAC and the FTP amoral the order, and were followed by many sensitince proups, so that in the end, up to Amount Komin family surred to put the FFI under COMAC's supreme command.

The most emportage securrection occurred in Paris. The Albed forces did not expect to reach the capital before the end of September, but the local population was at a definet aroud, which was encouraged by Communat propagands, but was not exchangely due to it. In July there were honger marches, a railwaymen's strike, and especially a bear demonstration on the tath, attended by 100,000 procie, whom the police were unable to discerse. By the end of July the growth of the mulices and the increase in the number of acts of inbotine induced the PCP to decide that the assurrection was race. On 18 August the city was purelysed by a CGT-CFTC-teapured strike, and the PCF CC issued as appeal calling for an uprising. On the 19th, the Community Rol-Tanguy, who was a charge of the Paris FFI, decreed a general mobilization, and the Paris Liberation Committee arrand the people to not arms from the Gurmons themselves by attacking lorries carryson. arms and immenation. De Goulle's delegates, Pareds and Chebus-Delmas, fait competiné to support the call far an insurrection. According to Farret, they did so in order 'to preserve unity, whilst urging the Americans to hurry' 10 The German communiter, von Choitstz, tried to cut his forces by offering to talk to the Angio-Americans and the regular Gauliut forces rather than to 'hoolieses. (toyour), terrormin and Community' Although talks did take place, at which the Germani offered to evacuate the capital it return for a "truce", and although as a seoult, the Gaullatts instructed the FFI up couse fire, the Parasan insurposts went shead unabated. On 21

August, after a stormy meeting, the CNR decided to resect the trace. a decising which even mainly weverers supported in view of the Germean' attack on the measure of Saint-Ours, as the course of which tracty people were killed. In the mountains, quot of Paris had already bost ishurated, and L'Hamanett, which responsed openly on the name day, aread continuation of the fight. From Legiton, in Guille erdered Laciery, the commander of the Free French Ferces armoured drymon, to harry "Act outckly, let there not be another Commune". When Laciere entered the Prench capital on the 24th it was practically a free city that he eastered. On the 25th, was Chaltes uncondisconnily surrendered in the presence of Locierc and Rel-Tangey. On the sith, de Guntle organized a transpiral pureds down the Champs-Elysius to Notice Dome. Controversus about the Parmini uninstruction. and the PCF's role in it went on well after the war. De Goulle classed in his Memoirs that the Community wasted to head the insurrection. and preclaim a Communicat, but Fauret points out that there is no evidence of such a Communist intention, adding that 'no historium, not even unti-Communit, has ever suggested it 40 Purvet also recalls that four years earlier. Wevened had preferred surrender to the German to the prospect of a Communit take-over, and he commanes: 'What a strange revered of face, or beyond the gulf, what a does community of thought? In As to whether the truce would have saved level, occurred differed and continue to differ. Those who favoured a truce grove that it was a chance worth taking, whereas thest copenents seems that the Germans had already shown they would exploit the situation and half many French pumple.

Atthough most of France was freed by the end of September, the war went on until I May 1945. The PCF's policy during its limit stages is withmend up in the stages put out by the party in August 1944, S'mus – combattre – travesiller. The first of these auto was not new, and the limit our concerned mostly the post-war future, but the street on 'fight' carried the scade of further conflicts between Camenaness and Guellints since it affected the hind of army France conded to wage the war. The clash became particularly sharp when de Guelle mound on disbanding all 'arregular' maintary units. In order to avoid a head-on confrontation, the PCF reluctantly supported his decision, but publicly regretted that the former particular had not been incorporated into the Franch army. After much heart-searching, the party size decided to support de Guelle's distaged for the descriptions of the various liberation commutates which had apring up throughout the land, on the ground that this form of 'deal power' was not continered to stability. Although Communities are required the commutation as new secrets, they began by arguing that as popular bothen they could strengthen the regular government. However, mass do Coude was adament on that point, the parry gove in, and Maserce Thoris (who had returned to France in November 1944 was the day on the Control Communities, despite, it is believed, the opposition of some other landers. Discussing the remains for the move, Fauvet writts that 'to is frequently the case with Communities, the sumplest expensions happens to be the trust', i.e. that the parry had resined the undendered of '..., ill these commutation which lose their sixthermy is man to profess regain them (as alternous to the fact that de Loude had mutalled his own men to profess as all regions) and of all those makens which are more cumbersome than effective', 12

The only other same which requires brief examination is whether there could have been a succeptator evolution in 1945. Trutalization must that, once much, the PC F 'betreved the workers' by not extempting to make use, and a number of sun-Communist echolory* believe that it was part of the deal made between States and the west that European. Community should support brand continues. The PCP's argument on this more is assurably based on its presentation of 'the balance of ciam forces. The bourneouse, it arvs, could contain to rule, because in Gauther wing had expulsioned its collaborationist wing and had effectively carriered all the orange of state power;*1 marrover, there were two materia Allian suiders in France, and they would have certainly appreciated to prevent a Communic surraing, in they did in Grunce in Dunamber 1944. As for the Prench people, they did not ment further conflicts, they longed for a return to poscelul conditions, and to most of them the liberature was its own reward, carrying with it the promise of a borner France. In his Memours, Duches awares that " ... d., through hindness or presemption, we had allowed ourselves to be dragged uses an adventurest forceble operation, we would have been abandoned by a number of our own mambars . . . 7,44

The fact that these five senses are missing is mentiound by the editors of L'Hamanité claudestrue, who add that their absence is due to obvious rusions' (op. est., vol. 1, p. 155), meaning presumably the disappearance of many documents after the Germans entered Prance. CHAPTER 5

Rise and fall: from ministers (1945-7) to cold war 'parishs' (1947-58)

Rine: the PCF on 'n party of government' (1949-7).

Both France and the PCF emerged from the wer with a counture of strongths and weaknesses. For France, the chief strength was that, together with her ailies, she had won the war and liberated her territory - hence the name by which the 1945-6 period is known, i.e. Libération. The close weaknesses were psychological and economic The scars left by the war took a long time to heal, and the state of the economy was gram, although the country's economic potential rememed great, all plants stood in need of moderniestson, especially in the coal industry. In addition, a number of cities had been desproved, presentory was at a standard], industrial production had suck to 31 per cent of the 1938 level, agricultural production was not faring such better, and finally, inflation and apemphysical were rung. For the PCF, the main strengths were increased membership (over half a million in June 1945 and three-quarters of a million in December of the same year), increased presture earned by the Communist Renotance record, increased industrial influence (for the first time in Prance, the revolutionary trend was stronger than the reformost trand), increased electoral support (the PCF became "to promise" parts de France' in terms of votes), and increased maturity. The mou weaknesses were that many Community had died in the bartle, including some very able leaders in all fields, and that the party was not yet fully aguspped to master a swift-changing, unprecedented minustana.

The unprecedented character of the utuation by in the precurious balance of forces in the world and in France steelf. Ossensibly, the wartime co-operation between the west and the USSR was maintained, but there were signs of a growing rift. Throughout Europe the left was striding aband (including British where the 1943 General Election resulted in a Labour landslide), but the conservative forces were still powerful and were biding their time. In Prance the old rating classes, described by collaboration and weakened by the confusional of 'transm' property' (e.g. the Respuis factories) and the national arcters of name major firms (e.g. the northern contificids), could still toly on cosmiderable wealth and on some government measurers; moreover, they had discovered under Vichy the benefits of state intervention and they autoritized the hope (which proved to be fully justified liner) that it might work in their favour. The working class had emerged in a great national force because of its contribution to the Resistance and it had two powerful political parties to represent it, the PCF and the SFIO, but they had to suchon with a mighty challenger, the Management Republicana Populative (MRP), which was a Christian-democratic party supported by the middle classes and vary loyal to de Gasile. This ground that, autority, parther the hourgement nor the working class could hope to govern alone.

The way in which the PCP reacted to this govel astuation is best most by examining three imper - its relations with the SP1O, its purhamentary and povernment attitudes, and the discrepancy betwere its theory and its practice. During the wer the SFIO had not thought that it was called upon to play a rule in the Reinstance as a party. Individual members were encouraged to som various Rosetimer aroupt, and a great theory did so, often displaying great courage. The groups they somed were amurally Gaullest-magazad, but this did ant prevent joint action with the Communists, so that at the end of the War the amounty of runk-and-filors felt that 'the Résistance élan was profound enough and passess enough's to allow for concessed and even classe co-essention. This may explain why, sowerie the end of 1943, the SFIO clanderson leadership offered to discuss with the PCF the possibility of achieving 'organic unity', and that the offer that reported in November take by the first less! concress of the party. It was the first time mace Tours that such a move had come from the Socialists rather than the Communician In sessions in the formation of a securité d'evaluate between the two parties, whose double task was to organise maned action and to prepare 'organic many' However, at a closed streeting of the SPIO executive on 21 December, the motorsty spoke against reunification. Vincent Auriol described the SPIO offer as 's meson of wordene off a monible Engineerate on the part of the Communist party', and Jules Moch and at had been made samply to evoid bearing the responsibility for distancy

For its part the PCF took the offer seniously, and on to June 1945

L'Humanist published the druk Unity Charter of the future pury, to by named Parts Outroor Pronçois in memory of Juliu Guarde's POF, the PCF's and the SFIO's common encestor. Like its 1934 predocuseer, this druft chartie would have involved the SFIO's ideological capitulation, since it demended that the Parts Ouwear be based on Marx, Ennels, Lemm and Status, that at should adopt 'democretic contribute", and that it should draw magnesting from 'the mosestic socialist victories' of the USSR. However, one should note that in agute of this, the druft spelinded the assertion that French nocalism would be built 'in the condenous which are poculiar to the situation and to the national character of our pupels. The survey of the SF1O leadership was negative. In a career of articles which appeared in Le Populaire in July and August 1945, Blum explained their stand by saying that in the PCF, 'there still largers a dependence. on the USSR... which is a mixture of liabit and passion'. At a private meeting of the SFIO executive he added another reason, the fear of becoming port of to impe apparatus whose organs, whose function, whose objectives are always wrapped up in some mystery'. The SPIO congress rejected the PCPs charger and all moves towards 'organic masty', but it decided to keep united action. The following congress, held in August 1966, went even further. Although the vactor was a left-womer, Guy Mollet, and although 'a continuumly of class interests' was declared to exact between the SFIO and the PCF, organic unity was relied out of order in long in 'international Community parties' remained 'subordinated to the Russian state', and named action was said to be 'induspensable', but only 'in specific correspondences. Moreover, the congress decided to wood up the comtte d'entenie between the two parties. Nearly ten years after the colleges of the Popular Front, the high hopes of left many were shattered once again. To say that the SFIO was chiefly (though not enclusively) responsible for this is not to accuse it of "betraval" (as the PCF predictably did), but samply to recognize the fact that, in the post-war garned, the Societies leadership had bucome most unhappy about the aprend of Community influence in Prance and about Soviet expansion in century Europe, and so find chosen to co-operate with the MRP at home and with the USA abroad. The PCF's share of the blome was that at lead not made any substantial concussors with regard to organic unity, but on the sense of united action, it had really tried to play the grame, if only because a had everything to gain from lit.

As for the mose SFIO charge against the Communists - amorismal attachment to the USSR - it was not unjustified, but the extreme way on which it was expressed by the Socialist leaders prevented them from acknowledges the potential as well as the real changes which were taking place in the PCF. One of the ways in which wemen Socialists. sought have helped the Communists to get rid of their nacrocal lovalty to the USSR was marted action, in the course of which the Constraints' boust that they were autonomous would have been put to the test. In France the formation of a PCF-SF1O appearament. which, as we shall see, was demanded on four occasions by the PCF and asympably resected by the SFIO, mucht have compelled the Communists to take an independent French stand, if only in order not to less all credibility with French public counten Moreover, in 1946. the PCF had in fact taken a stand which was not that of the Soviet government. For unlike the USSR and German Communicia, at had come out in favour of the internationalisation of the Risks and of France's control of the Sour province. The differences were only tactical, but this sione was new. So was the open acknowledgement that the PCPs attitude was not that of Molotov, as was spelt out by Georges Connict when he sold Blum that 'It is true that Prench subty differs from that of the USSR. No one is thinking of desiring this divergence. Léon Blum does not need to bring out some does exmachine from the Kremks to erbstrate between French Communists and German Community. . [French Communits] take their stand exclusively on the basis of the country's interests same kind of cautious autonomy was expressed by Toghath and the PCI when they demanded that Tracete should remain Italian, aithough States and Tito wanted at for Yugoslavia. It is past possible that a more undermanding attitude on the part of western socioldemocracy might have strengthened the trend towards greater independence in the PCF and the PCI ! How far it would or could have some we cannot tell, but there is little doubt that the Socialists' refusal to co-operate with the Community belond their rivals to Déceme more infransigent

The Liberition period was one in which the French people were frequently called upon to go to the polls as order to exercise their democratic rights. For the PCF, all them elections revealed two trends which were bound to dictate its policies. One was that the party was according suppressive victories, of which the mean agasticant will be analyzed below), but the other was that it will commanded memority support and thus could not hope to hold power except through a continue. As first, the party envisaged this continue as a very broad one and as a continuation of the 'entional unity' achieved during the Renotunce. At the CC lvrv morting of Sanuary 1645, while the war was still on. Thorey had forcefully denounced the massession, made by the ease letter and some Communion, that there ought to be 'dual power' in Prence (the liberation commutions, the molecus and the FTP existing alongside and independently of the central government) as a prejude to a sociatist revolution. (That had been the utilition in Russia between March and October (917) He musted, and the CC approved hose, that 'there is only one single state, one single state, and one made notice. At the tenth party congress, held at the end of June 1945, he made the point again and added that 'the recovery of France cannot be the took of a single party' but 'of the whole notion' and that the continued existence of 'a noverment of bread national and democratic analy' was, as far as the PCF was concerned, 'the most fortunate perspective for our country'

How to account for this stress on automal unity? Among non-Communicat scholars there are two different hypothesis put forward. One, causiously suggested by René Rémond and Maurice Agulhon,4 is that the PCF was wavering between a land of 'acc-asviction' and a kind of 'non-Popular Front'. If such heatstoom granted among the PCF membership, the purty leaders certainly put an end to them, even if they themselves had been unusing for a while, aspecially butween October 1944 (when both the PCF and the CNR obsected to de Goulle's dissolution of the statices patroonaucs) and Japanery 1444. (when the PCF CC accepted this dissolution at the livry marting already mentioned). The other hypothesis is that of Robert Aron who writes that, having failed so take power alone at the time of the Mhoretion of Paris, the Community their endeavoured to occupy bey poors at the more machine in order to stage 'what will be known later as the Prague coup! I (The 'Prague coup' refers to the fact that is Pobrancy 1948 the Cauch CP explored a constitutional crisis to put its own leader at the head of the government. This hypothesis is not very intiafactory for two reasons. One is that, labe all hypotheses, it rests on assumptions rather than proven facts. The fact that the 'France coup' recorded does not prove that a canalar coup was contemplated in France by the PCF. For - and this is the second russon - the vaccess all the Creck CP was due is no small measure to the fact that Catchoslovakas was part of the Soviet bloc, whoreas France was in the western bloc, under the protection of Anglo-American armies, and as for as is known, Britain and the USA had not suddenly converted to Markino-Lecturian and made the dictatorship of the profeticial their protectly goal? The Constitutions of all constrain may be Machavelian crooks, but they are also realists. And as realists, French Constitutions, must have known that they had no chance of getting away with a coup. They knew that their only chance was to take part in a condition within which they could hope to make aircode into the capitalist system.

If we now look at the PCF's own explanation of its stand, both that given at the time and that of modern Community historians, " we shall me that it bods down to the bebef that national unity was the only sound policy in 1945 became it corresponded to the then balance of forces. Before going any further, one must say that, of course, the party's restriction is not to be taken at face value. All that historians cap do is to report it, and afterwards, if at all possible, to try and assess how far the facts need to support it. This has been the present writer's approach throt ghour these pages, and his on a excuse for reminding readers of it is that the point cannot be made too often. The Pt. It's chief argument in favour of a government of national unity was half, given the respective strength of social as a position forces, no other government was possible at least unto he country had given used stable institutions. In a sense it was a novel form of waging the class struggle, for the alternative was a government against the people. Remembering that in March 1945 the Pope had declared that 'the democratization of the economy (was, threatened to an equal degree by the economic despotant of the anonymous masses as by private capital", the party concluded that the Values , and the hourgeouse its general) relied on the MRP to contain 'the anonymous masses' by occupying ministerial posts and that the same masses relied on the Communists and the left to contain the bourgoome by checking them. inside their former preserve - the government. In addition, formen policy considerations played as amportant part. The preservation of the anti-Hitler could on between the west and the Soviet Union was deemed indispensible to prevent the resurgence of German militarinto which was a threst to both France and the USSR according to the PUF), and as all purues were nominally committed to such a foreign policy, co-operation among them was regarded as possible and useful. A final factor was that Communists thought that British and the USA would have welcomed a government which excluded the PCF, and the latter new no remon to oblige them, although it did not openly my to. Our must agree that from a Communit point of snew, the PCP's policy made sense, and that it is unnecessary to look for ladden statives as order to account for it. Non-Lammunits are obviously entitled to enticise the policy on the ground that it was designed to strengthen the Community purty – this was indeed one of its same – and as such was had for Prence. But here we enter the field of value pudgettents, and these depend on different puspie's political philotophics.

The first exportant electoral consultation was the April-May 1945 increased electrons, at which the SFIO refused to draw up rount Resistance lists as proposed by the PCF Communist candidates went to the poll under the busines of Urney republicame at antifasciste and secured a high number of votes. The next test was the October 1945 referendum and the electrons for a Constituent Assembly. The referendary put two questions to the people, first, whether they wassed a new constitution, and accordly, whether they wested the appearament to carry on until a new constitution (was) drawn un? A Yes answer to the first operation meant the setting up of a new recubic (the Fourth Republic as at came to be known), and nearly all shades of agention advocated it. A Yes answer to the second question meant giving de Goulle a free hand in the sense that his government would not be controlled by an elected assembly until the latter had drawn upa deaft enoutatution. For this remain, the PCF came out is favour of a No vote, wharese all other parties backed de Goulle. The people's verdet was Yes to the first question by 96 per cout to 4 per cent, and You to the escond quantum by 66% per cent to 33% per cent. In the Constituent Assembly the PCF obtained 26.3 per cent of the votes cost and 151 seets, the SFIO 23 8 per cent and 133 seets, and the MRP 24 9 per cent and 241 meets. The PCP's score was the highest of any single party, and it represented as 11 per cent advance on its 1016 result. The results of the referendum and of the electrons brought about as engertest tectsoil change in the PCF's stand, for they revealed three things - one, that the PCP was a strong force, two, that the PCF and the SFIO had an atmojute monority, and three, that the PCF was able to influence a significant transbur of procise outside its own supporters to you No in the referendum. On the strength of the election results, the Communicat leadership postched their stand on the composition of the government and proposed the formation of a "democratic government led by Socialists and Communicis", arrupathat the two working-class parties gow commanded an absolute majority. However, this was not presented as the end of 'national mary', but as its communition is a new manner- although one could do without the MRP in government, the party argued, it was necessary and possible to called the support of the sacral groups which had vosed for that party. For the sam was not the building of a socialist society, but the implementation of the CNR programme which was in the interest of all classes except the 'two headred families'.

The SFIO retused to form a government with the PCF alone. erguing that the trapertite notation (PCF, SFIO, MRP) was best emted to achieve 'an orderly revolution'. Ropald Travely believes that this documen was a compromise between 'the prodominantly Rightlessing tendencies of the leadership and the more Left-lessing systpethes of the malitants' ? As for the PCF, it had no occion but to accept the three-purty government formule, although it 'presented conous drawbacks', as Thorax subsequently put it. Soon after the election, a atmous crisis bruke out ou 15 November, when de Guille refused to give the PCF one of the key manutrus. Foreign Affairs, Defence, laterior) on the ground that it could got be trusted to pursue an independent foreign policy and thus could not be put in charge 'of diplomacy, which expresses it, of the gray, which supports it, and of the police which protects it' (An almost Margust assenses) of the holts between the government and 'the more machine') The PCF Pagerousiv protested, and as de Gualle replied by tendering his remenation, at proposed, for the second time, the formation of a soverament led by Community and Socialists. For the second time, the SFIO refused. On the 19th de Gaulle was re-appointed by the Assembly, whiler the PCP abstraced. On the arer the general announced his government's composition. There were five Communists in it, including Therez who became a menuser for the first time in his life. Tilloo was put in charge of Armameuts, whilst National Defence as a whole came under de Gaulle's authority. The other throu-Communist magners were Billows, Marcel Paul and Ambroint Crouzet. The new government was short-lived, as de Goulle resigned. on 30 Juneary 1946 busines he wanted the book of the enecutive (bimaelf) to determine policy rather than Parliament. Immediately, and for the third time, the PCF suggested a predomizantly PCF-SFIO government with a small token of other left imagers. For the third time the SFIO and No. Another trapertite government with formed under the presturning of Felix Gount, a Socialist. It included age Communicate (the above five plus Lourent Casanova), see MRP and seven SPIO. The Communists also had two under-secretaryshaps, and Therest was made one of two deputy premare, the other one being a member of the MRP. It is reported that he impressed Duff Compar, who spoke of his 'personal charm', and the US sension, Vandesberg, who exclaimed: 'How can such a healthy man be a Communist?'

In May 1946 the Constituent Assembly submitted its druft construction to the people. The PCF and the SFIO supported at, but the MRP was agreed at because it advocated a single legislative charabit. By a narrow majority of about ten malhon votes: 40 per cent) against abour nane malbon. 36 per cent ; and about tix million abotentions (24 per court, the French prople rejected the draft. On a June a second Constitutes Assembly was elected, in which the PCF had 146 seets (36 per cent of the pull, the SFTO 115 seats (31 2 per cent) and the MRP 160 souts (3$ 1 per cent). A new government was formed by Georges Bidsult (MRP), which included seven Communists (the newcomer was René Arthous), see SE1O and eagle MRP. Thoras and Googs were the two deputy-pressures. In October the amended draft constitution was narrowly approved by about mine million votes (36 per cent) against nearly eight million (31.2 per cent) and nearly eight million abstrations (§1 § per cent). The new constitution provaded for sex equality, the right to work, the right to strike, the right to educations, the automaliantics of de facte monopoless, a Social Security service, and the setting up of joint management-workers work place commerces. In November a General Election for a legislative assembly gave the PCF too seats (all 6 per cent of the poll), the SPIO 101 parts (17 9 per cent), and the MRP 158 ments (26.4 per cent). Thorax offered himself as condulate for the premiership of a Communit-Security government improved by 'all Republicans', and Ductor raggested a mosting of the two portion in order to draw up a contained government programme. The SFIO declared to meet the PCF (fourth Socialist refund). The PCFCC then met at Putesian (37) November 1946) so draw up its own programme with the sam of submitting it to Parliament. It included the modernimbon of French. industry, memores against price rices, a balanced budget, initial inguistion, the consolidation of democratic sastitutions, a voluntary association to replace the colonial empire, and a foreign policy based on Prance's co-operation with the USA, Britain and the USSIL. The programme was assacked by all parties bucause, up the words of Le-Monde, it had made no mention of 'independable merifices'," to which L'Homestel retorted that it was 'the trusts and not the working people who must be asked to make undepensable manifold.  On a December the SPIO National Council heard Mother declare that 'not to vote for Thorax !was | to cur ensert! off from the working class', but on the following day twenty-these Sociality deputies refused to vote for the Communicat leader. He needed a minimum of $10 votes and get only $10. The next contender, Sedault, managed $40 votes only, to that in the end Blum formal a government made up of $10 minimum machines. A mouth or so hear he was successfed by mother Socialist, Paul Ramodur, who included in his cabaset five Communicate (Thorite to deputy-premier, Billion in minimist of Netional Defence, Tillion, Crount and Marrane', right $10, five MRP, two UDSR (a small light wing group, and two right wing independents.

What was the nature of the PC P's electoral support in the 1945-6 period? Presigne Cognil points out that " the presenting of communication upon regions with a consumption origination appears to bu sobstantially diagram in 1940 their was the own at 1940. 11 According to Forevot, the PCF's post war electoral exposet extended from Dunkirk to Marredies instead of being confined to the industrial parth. Paris, the centre and the south. Sociologically, the Community electeenter was made up of two mans groups, 'one camply expeditions and mainly rural, and the other more revolutionary and exceptally working-cheef of The ministers of the first group voted for Continueinto business these marry was more to the left than any other marry in the emestry rather than out of encedest or Marant convictions. The supmore as very by the vacual arough stationed manufit from their bolist that Commonate could be trusted to defend the workers' enterests in their struggles against the employers, however, such support was dutperconance, and there were as particular agradicant various and with June 1946 and November 1946, with the PCF forces ground at some and contract arress us June and remaining at the specific later. One should also note that for a Community party, electoral support does not tell the whole more. Equally impurious, if not more, is its ability to unflowable large masses of groups who do not wate for its candidates. In 1944-1, the PLF was on the whole measured in the general became at was contribution to Project's liberation, whereas at 1946 at fished to win over the moreovy of Socialist and Christian workers and make them put sufficient promute on the hunderships of their respective parties. That was largely due to circumstances beyond its control, the chief one being the worsening of the international situation, but the defects of its own work and propagately sine contributed to the failure.

If we now look at the party's record in poverament, the two main things which French Commission themselves gained from it were experience and credibility. Both were used extensively as propagateds. arguments until 1982 to try and convince people that France had already had Communist managers and that it was not a question of the devil you don't know when it came in the same of their return to the povernment. The PCF was also fond of streamer (and stall as to this day) the part it played in 'the battle for producting' and the 'progressive' measures introduced by its manuters. The first of these was regarded by Construents at an account; accounty (to approve bying standardo) and as a political duty (to ensure Propee's independence). To those who found it strange that a working-class party should call on workers to work harder, the leadership popled that as post-way Frence the servicion was indeed reversed because it was 'the trusts' which were examel increased production (which was not untrue) and furthermore that the working class could not be indifferent to the sesse of neuronal independence. One of the most femous illustrations of the party's stend was Thorex's appeal to the maners, made at Wagiers (in the north) in July 1945. He told them that 'to produce, to dug coal (was) today the highest form of (their) claim duty' because it meant strengthening 'the unity of the working class with the working people of the middle classes with the peasant masses, in order to terrory the country's engrence. He reposted this opposit on numerous *Occasions in Tage As for the messores introduced by Communical manators, the party had special emphasis on those of Ambrone Crosset who, as Labour manuser, gave workers Social Security benefits, the return to the farty-hour week, and better wasse and conditions, those of Billoux who, as Defence manager, leavisted in favour of war victure, the revival of aircraft production under Tillog. an manuscr of Avieties, the plans for the nationalisation of coal and electricity submitted by Marcet Paul when he was in charge of Indiatrial Production, and finally, Thorez's reform of the civil service, Which short civil servents union rights, use equality and a decest thinsmus wass. Although all these assurers must be credited to the government as a whole, they were after magned by Community, who fought hard for their adoption and implementation. The charge that the purty also used its government presence to 'exprart' key poutsons in the same apparation is bard to substitutioning for the sample reason that the same organs of same power, the armed turcus, the police, finance, and the lake, remained outside Communicat control throughout the period. Of course, there must have been same cases of 'jobs for the boys', but in this respect, the Communication were not above, and furthermore, the 'jobs' so question never enabled the PCP to 'throughout' the state from within.

This brings us to an important superior of the Communist minimum. participation. The early was in office, but not in paper, and on 30 James y 1946, the CC warned that the two should not be confused. However, as the standard Community criticism of Social-democratic sorters was - and removes - that they are prepared to take office but. not power, one as emuled to ask whether the PCF's stand was not a new various of social-democracy. One cannot ready my that it was. To begin with, a distriction must be drawn between form and content. For what was considered wrong in the pair was not so much the fact of practing a "bourgeous government", but of doing to in order to act as "the physicists of the place capitalist system'. That was clearly not the PCP's intention, for m and out of the government at continued to regard 'the capitalist traces' as the main enemy. The government strelf was not smemed as 'bourgeous', but as one which rested on a precartone bulance of forces, as we have seen. Neither the bourscome nor the works no class could be save of vectory in 1945-6, and each fought a tough 'war of postsons', to use Grammi's phrase. If after 1947 the betracouse won, this was because, according to the Community (who then openly said so), it had the support of 'enterpatronal capital', of the Vetican, and of sacral-democracy. One may perhaps add the fact that the PCF was over-communic about the chances of reversing the trend.

If the PCF's practical appearsh had changed, but not necessarily in a social-democratic direction, the theory and practice of French toctal-democracy had also undergone aganticant alterations. For enample, the SFIO no longer advocated 'class collaboration' of the pre-war type, because its leadern believed that 'the French bourgeoise [had] lost the character of a ruling class' (Blum) and that the new regime was 'a transitional regime which is no longer capitalism' (André Philip). For the PCF, however, France was still a capitalist country, and the limited amount of astronalisations had not stopped the power of 'les transits some patrie'. Moreover, although both the SFIO and the PCF spoke of 'astronal surry', they differed phone in manney. For the Socialists, it ments that there was now 's professed companyer of synerous between the working class and the whole of the nation (Diam), but for the Communists, more mount they the working class should drove all democratic and notional forces his the erruggle, agrees the traces' 15 Even grows agreefuges wen the program between filters and the PLF on the purpose of government. purticipation.  On the case of the possible half harmon such an advance and the transport to countern, the P.C.F.'s theory largest behind no process. To what extent the party a theoretical mirror was due to Stahn a cole, as Jean Ellevation suggests," it is difficult to my. For when Status met a British Labour Purty delegation in 1946 he told three, according to Morgan Philipps a report in the Dusty Harnid, that there were two tunds to encurious, the Roman rand which was aburtan but blandy. and the Bouck 'purtamentary small, which was bount but more perceive, and he added that the followers of Mara and Lanca did not recognise one single read. He made the spine point in Gestionid, the Cauch lander, and told him "Our path was shorter, faster and it out much bland and victime. If you can arend a, then arend it " I breatly on 1911 the Servet leader gave his blowing to the CPIsI's new & programme, The British Road to Sociation, which specifically second that 'Bretain will reach Sociation by his own rand'. On the I sthat hand, the same Status rebulant Directory for having overpersoned in his view, the differences between the Soviet Laura and ductors havego, and Danstrov was refuctantly computed to withdraw his remarks: 1947). In use case, Status a role could headly have been the only factor to account for the Pt. E.s evening of the same, Other factors probably included the fact that entitle of the party a best through ests TE POT COT Policier, were doned, the thegratude of the printered both which daily found the insiderature as well as the read, and fair, and the forloan that a defeate about former excusions mught be premoture or even dangerous. An illustration of the last point was an article by Vactor Michaut, which appeared in the August 1945 issue of the Cahiers du Communitier and which emerted that talk about socialism at this stage could only 'frighten and not off a lot of ordinary people among the numbing peasants and the middle clames'.

On one occasion, however, the PCF squarety faced the issue of 'the French road to somehon. That was as November 1946, when Thores. gave an interview to the London Tomas 10 One of the questions but to han was whether he still thought 'the dictatorship of the proletarist' to be necessary. His reply was. The progress of democracy all over the world . . . allows one to envisage the road to socialism by other paths than those taken by the Russian Commonists. In any case, the path at necessarily different for each country. We have always and and thought that the French people, with their wealth of great tradition, will find their own way towards more democracy. . . . ' He also pledged that the PCF would respect the purbamentary system and stick to the democratic programme which had euroed at 'the confidence of the popular masses.' Finally, uptake some of his colleagues. 20 he said that nationalisations represented 'a step forward on the way to socialism.' The agnificance of the interview was that it was the first time the party had apulses of a specifically French road to accushing which was democratic and, by implication, peaceful. Until 1986 it also proved to be the only tune. Although Thorez's statement was printed as a pumphlet of which a million conses were distributed, no party debate took place ground it, and soon afterwards it was put in cold storage and was not beard of agree vertal de-Stalimentron had got under way.

Fall: The cold-war period (1947-55)

The cold war may be said to have marted in carnest with the March 1947 proclamation of the Trumen doctrine, which gave the USA the right and duty to save 'the free world', and with the September 1947 Zhdanov riposte that the world was spirt into two hostile camps, 'the imperialist camp', headed by the USA, and 'the anti-imperialist camp', headed by the USSR. In Prance, the cold war begin in April 1947, when 'the French government (choic) the West over a Soviet alliance's and gave up its claim on the Ruhr in exchange for the transfer of Sour coal to France under a triportite agreement aggree by France, British and the USA. However, the continued processes of Communical managers in the government gave the including impress-non that international and national unity ways still on. The discounwas thereeved on 5 May 1947 when Remotier destroyed PCP manytire from his caboost. The two maps which being he distrace to a head were Indo-Chans and wages. On Indo-Chans, the PCP was descious to downers its 'agis-impression stand', all the most in since the Victorians Index were Community, and after advisors Remains not to wore wer on He Chi Manh, it showed at discoursed. by abstracting when the vote on unfitting credits was taken as March. 40 In April PCF minuters whited out of a column meeting to protest against the arrest of Medagorear M.P's ofter a universe sevent had broken out to the aland. On an April, against the C.G.T's advice, the workers of two Resoult plants went on strike for higher wants, as torgod to do by Trutatymia and anarchasts. As the strain agreed, the CGT decaded to grade at afficial. The PCF inspersion had to act quarkly, for whotever their private views they could not run the risk of bring out off from their working-class loop. At a May Day ruby, addressed by Heard and Benest Fraction speaking on behalf of the C.G.T. and by Thorogon the PC.P's behalf, they gradeed full suggest. Although the PCP leadership began by hopefully assuming that the breach was a temporary one, subsequent events were to show that it was destined to last for a very long time and that the party was condemned to no through a decade or more of almost complete inclosure. To all antents and purposes, it was at war with the acversment on all somes. It was non-Lommunuts who had been 'the first tohume ocus hostilation', 24 but for their part the Community tried to give as good as they not. They attacked the successive governments of the Fourth Republic with as much vigour as they were being artached. by them. To the charge that they were a 'foreign party', they replied by dobbing all other political parties le parts américain; for the diagon L'Amérique pasera, which expressed the videoproad balant that France's exmosur recovery depended on US aid, they substitisted their old slogan, Fairs payer let rickes, and they warned against 'the enalsymment of France by a foreign power', against the government's foreign, home and colonial policies, they staged demonstrations, strikes and procest actions; finally, to answer to 'the ideological offensive' against them, they ancompromisingly defended their own doctrine. Before emmining the school aspects of their poury-model attenueles. We street upon a broof plants at France's aconomic and political situation.

Economically, the most striking features were the rapid growth of industrial concentration and increased state intervention, both of which, according to Markista, made French capitalism turn into 'mase monopoly capitalism'. The first phenomenon involved the restriction of which and power to a small number of giant firms. Their firms benefited from American aid and from the French state's attempt to against the accountry. In 1946 John Manast draw up a 'national plan' whose aim was not to control private enterprise, but to occure the employers' co-operation with the government by promising them higher profits in a result of reticenhanting. The trend continued under the Fifth Republic, and so this day, national economic plans are part of the nation's account, his. John Ardigh reports that a member of the employers' federation told him that their association with the state was 'n valuatory one', it and he gives two reacoust to account for the fact that private industry 'should have co-operated so readily with the Plan'. One is 'the common background of the planners and the technocrats as some key furns'. The other is that state industries gave the lead. If the Plans enabled France to become, in a very short time, a leading industrial power, the other side of the coin was the widening gap between profits and wages which is revealed by the following figures: 29

	Wages	Parmers	Satings	Profes
	16	96	%	96
1938	45	7.2	16	37
	41	x$	4	40
1947 1948	39	13		46

Such figures account for what Tiersky calls 'the legitimicy of the economic and social demands' put forward by the unions and supported by the PCF. The most important social transformation was the dramatic decline of agriculture, as a large number of personals were leaving the countrywide to go and work in the new industries. Equally againment was the growth of a service industry and the emergence of a new urban middle class. Urbanisation changed the face of France and the outlook of her people. More and more Frenchmen were paid a wage or a salary and were entitled to social security benefits, more and more French women swelled the ranks of industrial, commercial and other workers, more and more French people of both sense became unionised.

The effect of all this on the PCF's policies was bound to be very great. On the one hand, urbanuation meant that a majority in the country now had the same basic interests, so that a revolutionary party could put forward asmediate radical programmes without curting the nation some two opposing below, up the other hand, the influx of new thembers into the working class and the growth of new middle strata. had perforce to give a new look to the usues of working-class unity and popular unary. The PCF appreciated these points, but not sufficiently. For example, when reacting to the claim that Prance was living in a 'welface state' and 'a consumer society', it did not go beyond seving that 'popular captialism' was a myth and that all game had been won by strucked. Even if this was true, it was too general to be quite setusfactory. Thorex's 1955 articles to prove that Marx's law of 'absoliste and relative impoverishment' of the working class still applied to modern Prance were a sparsed reply to those who asserted that all suctions of society were better off in the post-war era, and Fauvet admin that 'there was some truth in [his] demonstration, backed by figures...'. But Provet adds that he had been 'too systematic in his analysis' and had not taken into account 'the diversity of structions' ²¹ Generally speaking, the PCP's understanding that many social sections had common sisterests was not matched by its understanding of the specific needs of such section. As a result, it tended to concentrate an trucktional ferme of sadiatrial struggle. In addition, it under-estimated the importance of the new secus amount which had armost, e.g. women's role at society. But then, most other political forces were equally short-nighted.

Pointscally, the Fourth Republic was a parand of austability. From May 1947 to Impury 1946 there were no fewer than fourteen governments. Until Jame 1943 these were based on SFIO-MRF conlitions, together with a token number of Radicals and members of the newlyformed UDSR (The latter, whose full same was Union Dissecratiout at Socialiste de la Résutance, was a socialist group which included Francou Mirrorrand, it was even more sut- PCF than the SFIO) However, the SFIO-MRP partnershap did not prove strong. enough to testinated the contempous more of state and to Cotholic schools, strongly opposed by the traditionally secular Socialist party and no less strongly favoured by the Christian MRP. A major break accurred in February 1940, when the Socialist ministers withdrew from the appearances of Georges Bidoult (MRP), but differences between the two 'allies' were temporarily patched up in July, and the SFIO repeated the government, which was headed by Pieven. (UDSR) noted March 1951, and by Quantile (Radical) until the June. 1952 General Election, Borwson June 1951 and January 1956 the $F10 did not you gay government, but one candat my that it was really part of the Opposition, lake the PCF on the left or the Gaulians. on the right, because an deputate frequently wood with the government. There was a noticeable shalt to the right in March 1952, when the Independent Autoine Propy became Prime Manufer, and again in June 1913, when another Independent, Joseph Laniel, formed a cabaset which lested a whole your. Lansel was succeeded by a dynamic Radical leader, Pierre Mendès-Prance (June 1954-Pebruary 1955), and then by a more moderate Radical, Edgar Fours, who was PM. until the January 1946 General Election. As for deGoulle, although he had ostensibly retared from politics, he founded the Ressemblement du Pourle Françair (RPF) in 1947, and he was for ever promag score on the potently obvious weaknesses of the Fourth

Republic. Of these weaknesses the PCF was no less critical, but instead of demanding a 'strong executive' like the practal, it classed that a really 'strong' government was one which 'relied on the people' and was not controlled by so-called 'experts'

During the cold war, foreign policy became the central battleground between the PCF and all other political parties. There were two reasons for this. The first one as that by 1947 the asturnstional Communist movement had adopted the view, first expressed by Zhdanov at the measural meature of the Commiscent, 14 that the world. was now aplit into two housile camps, the camp of 'stococculous and wer', headed by the USA, and the camp of 'socialism and peace'. hended by the USSIL. The struggle for sence and the defence of the Sover Union then became the purenount duty of all Communicati purious, because they were east as the precondition for any kind of ancial and political advance at the west. As for as the PCF was concerned, one can say that it was never more variently pro-Soviet than in the 1947-54 period, but it is necessary to add that of the same time its opponents - from the melat-wane to the SFIO - were never more violently pro-American. French Community genuinely behaved that weakening the USA and solidority with 'the socialist camp' were so crucial that without them, the prospect of a socialist France in the future was unchankable. On the other hand, non-Communist parties genuinely thought that Prance's recovery could never take place without American anastance. The SFLO, in particulat , felt that American credits alone were able to out the country back. on its feet, and that without them at was impossible to envisage a future notabilit France in which liberty (associated with 'Washingson") would prevail instead of 'totalitarismum' (associated with 'Moscour'). For different remons, centre and right-wing parties also relaid heavily on the USA.

This brings us to the second factor which accounts for the importance of foreign policy usess, anosely, that they were larked to the preservation and modernmation of France's socio-aconomic system. According to the PCF historian and aconomist, Henri Claude, the French bourgeoisse, which, in the pre-war period, had exported its capital to Europe, the Near Bast, Latin America and Chana, had to recked with the fact that, after 1945, both emiters Europe and the Far East had coused to come under Franch influence. It then sought new ways of getting rich. One was the modernmentwe of France street and the acting up of large firms capable of competing with foreign rivids,

Both these mass required state intervention and outside aid, and neither could be achieved without outsing the PCP, which was the major obstacle to their implementation. ¹³ One does not have us be a Market in order to concode that, whatever the motives of French rulers, industrialisation, the use of the colonies, and state intervention did indeed proceed on an unprecedented scale, and that American aid helped in the process. Moreover, Henri Cloude's analysis explains why, in the PCP's view, foreign and home policies had become industrialistic The foreign policy insises on which the Communical fought especially herd were the Marshell Plus, NATO, the USSR, pence and Germany On the first three they were practically technologe, but not so on the last two.

The Marshall Plan, officially known to the European Recovery Programme or ERP, was America's offer, made by Gourge Marshall on 5 June 1947, to provide economic constance to Baropean construe, 'a number, if not all', on the condition that they could agree among themselves on 'a programme designed to place Europe on its feet economically' Britain and France reacted by seviting the Soviet Union to joint talks, and they suggested the setting up of 'internamed expert commerces' to draw up, on the basis of saformation 'voluntarily suspined' by each country, a list of requirements and plane. The three powers' foreign augusters met in Paris on 26 June. but they failed to reach agreement. Molotov completed that the Angle-French proposal was 'n violation of national severeignty', and he mainted that it was up to each country to produce six own estimates of the anestunce it peeded. Subsequently, the Sevent Union denounced the Marshall Plan or 'on imperiabilitiesp' and each that its men was to enable the USA to control Europe aconomically and polytically. That became the PCF's assessment, but before that, the party had been countries. Although it server shared Bluss's wild unchonesen for the Marshall Plan (which he described as 'the finest grampic of dissaurated and ever given by a big power"), as firm reaction was one of mild welcome, on the assessments that it assessment to financial aid without political straigs. It is worth adding that its ettstude throughout was that France stid most foreign assistance, but that her independence was not the price she ought to pay for it. When the 11th party congress opened on 15 June (i.e. on the eve of the di-fored Parts conference), Thorez denied that he looked upon the ERP at a 'true', although then is what had been amorted in L'Home-need, and he further densed the paper's report that he had used the expression homself. Although the contrast between L'Humanite and the General Sucretury was explanted above (unconvincingly) as an error. made by the party press service, it was obviously a reflection of the party's initial confusion. After the breakdown of the Paris conference, no such confusion was possible. The PCF dutifully echoed the Soviet Union, in did other Communist parties, including these which, like the PCI and the Caech CP, had expressed the hope that the 'Bag Three' would come to an agreement French Communics then started a veciforous compaign against the Plea and called for the setting up of 'defence committees' to save French industries from American interference in particular, the party charged the USA with great power arrogance because it never consulted its allies. In this respect at was not enterely alone, for even La Monda complained that the Americans had 'replaced a nenuncly collective diplomacy. a deplomacy which is underscally defeated by the strongest ally (6 February 1943).

The Marshall Plan was followed by a western addrary alliance, the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO), which came into being in 1949. The PCP's most apportunt action agreest NATO was the 28 May 1952 demonstration which it organized in conjunction with the Peace Movement and the CGT. Its sam was to present against General Radgway's coming to Paris to take up his post in supreme NATO commander. As Ridgway had just returned from Korea, where he was accused of having used papelin and gerus warfare, the Communists and their supporters meknamed him Ridginay La Pesta. Despite the fact that the demonstration had been banned by the government, it took place all the same and lasted erveral hours. Over seven hundred people were greated, about faity were wounded, and one Algerian was killed. Two hours after it had ended, at about 10 p.m., Jacques Ducios (who had not been present) was arrested as his way home. His errest was, in Fouvet's words, 'completely diegal and quite stuped', 24 for he was entitled to perlamentary immunity, leftable only if an tadactable offence and but a constanted. He could not even be charged. with unlowful possession of fire-arms, because the revolver found in his cur, and curried as a precisation against attacks from which he had suffered to the past, did not belong to him but to his chruffest. In desperation, the authorities fell back on two pigeons which were also found in the car and had been given to Duclos by a friend. They were described as cerner pursoes and as evidence that un underground plot against France was being banched by the 'Reds'. However, after the pigeons were examined by five experts and prenounced to be of the adobte variety (in fact the young to fly!), the authorities were teinstwint creatfalles. The pigman' plot, as the affair cause to be known, and little to enhance the prestige of its authors. On the other hand, the hurriedly called, budly propored demonstration officially organized by the unions to demand Ducton's release was a failure (4 June 1951). On the 19th the PCF CC took part of the blame for this failure and worned against 'sectoriums'. During the five weeks that Ducton was in just extensive searches were made, but nothing was found to substantiate a case, and on a July the Communion leader had to be freed

If all French governments sided with the USA during the war, the PCF, for its part, firmly saided with the USSR to which it pledged 'unconditional support'. It was an unfortunate phrase, and inter-Theres qualified it by saying that the support was in fact condimensal by the USSR's socialist noture. In September 1948, the Politbureau pledged that "the people of France will not, will never spake war on the Soviet Umon', and in February 1949. Thorez replied to the question. which was manatently put to the PCF, 'What would you do if the Red Army occupied Pans? After ruling out the possibility that the USSR. could ever be an aggressor, he saked in his mrn; if France were deneged rate on anti-Soviet war and if the Soviet army 'was compelled. to pursue the aggresser' on French soil, " . . . could the workers and people of France behave towards the Soviet Army otherwise than did. the workers and people of Polonic of Russians, of Yusonians, etc.? It was not only to event least presecution that Thorax had resorted to the and any but to show that he could not accept the terms of the question. Other parties and they were outrained, but although Thores was summaned to appear before a parliamentary commission, if proved impossible to prosecute hum.

The mour of pance enabled the PCF to break through its wolston. Instally, there were two pence movements, one led by Y we Forge and one led by the Community, but at the end of 1945 the two marged and took the name of Mosroewese de la Pasz. Pence commuteres were set up throughout Prince. In April 1949 a world Pince Congress, presided by Johnt-Carre, was held in Paris, and on the well of the maeting half bung a huge dove painted by Picasan. There were pence marches all over France. In 1950 the Stockholm Appeal culting for the busining of nuclear weapons gathered five hundred million agrarants, fourteen insilion in France, according to Community sources.

According to the same sources the 1951 Berlin Appeal demanding a peace pact among the great powers gathered twelve malion agreetyres in France. In addition, the PCF, the CGT and the Peace Movement organized countries protest actions, such drug the transport workers' referral to transport arms for use against Vietnam or for future use against the Soviet Union. The Peace Movement 'screed in one of the few points of connection between Communists and non-Communists in France during the Cold War'. ¹⁰ For the PCF, the fight for purce had the added advantage of providing a practical perspective to its own members and supporters. How far the leadership believed with the rest of the international Communist movement that 'the many peace movement can lead to power' it is difficult to my, but it seems to have based its whole survegy on this assumption.

The other 'bount of connection' between the PCF and other forces was Germany Community were unable to prevent west European aconomic integration, especially the joint control of call and used production, but in their fight against malicary integration and German rearmament, they found alber unoug Radicals such as Hernot and Deladier and among right-wingers such as de Guulle and Weygund, In-1953 the PCF declared strelf ready to co-operate with all Frenchmen. whoever they are - we stress, whoever they are' to combat the plans then afoot for a European Defence Council (EDC). Some party members felt that their leaders were going too for, especially in envisaging an 'alliance with those who in 1976 banned the party', but they were told by Thorez that 'the party does not fear semporary agreements with morable alber. In August 1954 the National Ameribly rejected EDC by are wores to 264, a result largely due to the combined opposition of Goulbets and Communists. It was the first motor occasion made 1647 on which the PCF was not included in Perkument.

On the home front, the party fought industrially and electorally. In 1947 it exploited a series of strikes which it had not untrated, one in May and one in November-December which 'turned into a general strike in entire departments, notably in the court-west'. The government used the police and the army against the strikers, kalling one worker in Marseilles and another three in Valence. Shortly after the strike, a break-eway union from the C.G.T was formed with S.F.I.O backing and took the name of Force Outview (FO). Once again, French unions were spin, but 'this time the Socialists were in the missisty'. The FO landership 'treatment adamentity hostile to overtures from the CGT.10 which leads Thereby to remark that the pottern in the political and in the industrial fields 'was strikingly similar: a series of proposals from the Commissions effected out of head by the Socialists' 14 In 1948, the miners went on write and were supported by the CGT and the PCF Julia Moch, the SF1O Home Manuster, who had already used troops and police against the 1947. strikers, that time equipped them with war material, tanks, gas and machine graps. Four stances were killed and brackreds were wounded, which led to strong protests from the PCF in Parliament. Jules Moch. was called a 'murderer' by Thorex, a 'acoundrel' by Ductos, a 'basterd' (saleud) by Floremend Bosse, and a 'preferment har' by Locopur Nearly half the manury' datagatus were arrested and sailed, and in some areas, miners were forced to go down the pas at machine-gun grount. Whilet the strake was in program, the government tried to discredit the PCF by accurate it of having received foreign money to stay up trouble, and Duclos counter-attached by charging La Populary and PO with being largely financed by the USA.

By far the most uncortant strikes occurred in August 1953. They were sparked off by Lancel's 'powerty decrees', which had made 25,000 public revenus redundant. The FO federation of gootal workers called for 'on unbehand general strake', and a joint CGT-CFTC appeal brought out the manacipal workers. Three days later, three malhon workers were on strake, demanding the sepent of the decrees and a general wage rase. A substantial proportion were not undustrial workers but miarred employees. The PCF declared as full support, partly out of traditional working-class solidarity and partly because it hoped that a mass movement of each magnetude would bring the Land government down, In this, it was disapprenated because towards the end of the strike, the CPTC and FO accepted the government's concurring, then saving Leanel in extremit according to the Community. The strike, however, had political repercussions, as both the Sociabit, Moilet, and the Radical, Mendes-France, attacked the government, whilst continuing in reject united acting with the PCF. It is worth noting that throughout the whole 1947-55 period. numerous strikes took place. Not all were PCF- or CGT enepared, but in every case the party was anger to be involved. Its industrial activity and victorius made up for its political impotunce.

This political impotence was largely caused by the SF3O's 1947 documen to launch the so-called 'Third Force', i.e. a Socialist-MRP albance against eight-wing extremum (de Goulle) and left-wing extremes (PCF). Later, communicate was declared 'the primary danger' (in danger provisions). The PCF socrement of the 'Third Force! Win that it maked the Americans and the Prench bourgeouse to was social-democracy assess communium, but the SFIO sociafied its mand by strying that the PCP's andorsement of Soviet temperatures. policies' made it on unreliable partner. Rather than accept a rational debate on the most (which admittedly was rather difficult in a coldwar change, if only to win over ordinary Societal impropriets, the PCF preferred to present the SFIO's new course as unadularesed betravel of the working class. The Third Force was only partly successful. It has the Community out of government, but it did not destroy their addustrial and even electoral influence. Marunyar, it shall not pay off chatarally despite the 1951 to Capparentement which allowed the parties which were 'related' (appearance) to get all the same at constitutions were they managed to poll 51 per cent of the votes. The law was assend at the Community (who were austing allowed nor willing to declare any Yamaly reinforcible? with 'reactionany parties") and to a losser extent at the Goutliets (who could said did. conclude albaneas with centre parties). The election results gave the PCF about five gullion votes (25.6 per cent), the SFIO 2,700,000 votes (a last of 700,000) (14.5 per cent), the MRP 2.350,000 votes (a loss of three million) is a per cent), the Gaulius XPF over four million votes (32 5 per cent), the Reducals about two mallion votes (10 5 per cost) and the adependent conservatives ever two malices votes (2) per cent). The unfarmess of the electoral law was reflected in the membly's composition, the PCF, which had polled more votes than the RPF, had 103 deputes, while the RPF had 121. The SPIO had 107, the MRP 95, the Radicals 90, and the conservatives 96. Thersby. comments that the 'quanticulation of the rules of the game' way have been successey 'to more the French Republic', but that it 'frinched the principle of representation of the electories, 10 Philip Williams also believes that the government parties' extention to reduce Communical and Goullet representation was achieved 'at a high arise in apparent naturates! 40 For the PCF, the results were notifier a curse for you nor for sedness because the few Communist lesses in Paris and north. of the Loure were made up by game in the south. The party's electoral support came mostly from makeast workers and from protesters of all kands.

In the field of colonial policy, the PCF started by being alone against everybedy size in its support of the Victnamese and the

Algerian agramations, but gradually, Prench public aginuou switched from a pro-way to a pro-prace attitude. The wat agreed Vallage boson while PCP measures were still in the appearament, after the fashers of the 1947 conference which had been convened to work out pians for the former cology's independency. That faching was followed by the hombing of Haiphong and Hanot, which prompted Ho Chi Mash to call for armed remarance. The PCF fully supported hum, and after an appareties were oursed from the government, it expressed that proport is its propagation, in its protest actions and in 22 partiementary activity. The propagated denounced 'the amout character of the war' and classed it was being waged to bring super-profits to the truck and to fit in with the 'world imperalist strategy' of continuing communion. The protest actions, organized together with the CG $\Gamma_{\rm e}$ the Percy Movement, and wuman's end youth organismous, sacinded the dockers' and redweymen's frequent refuset to headle wer material mercaled for the French sensy in Victoria, and a musicer of individual. gentures. Of the lotter one must mention Raymonde Dien's attempt in February 1990 to stop a trum carrying war motored by lying on the radowy lines, and Henry Martin's anti-war propagands among unions. Both were maied, the former for one year and the letter for five years, and the party branched big campaigns for their release. Martin was frend in 1953. In Parliament, after the French had been defeated at Dien Bien Phu and the novermenent had fallen as a result, the PCF stated that it would support any government which would order a coon-fire and conclude peace. On 17 June, it voted for Mandés-France because he had promused manadante peace in Indo-China, although Meades-France hamself declared that he would rather not be elected if he was going to owe his position to Commission votes. In the end, the new PM not a consfortable majority without having to include Communicative supports, and in July 1954 he seemed the Geneval agreements which provided for the withdrawal of French troops and the division of Victoria into north and south, pending free electrons under international control. The agreements were retained by the Namenal Assembly and also by public openion, as most French propiet had come to regard Varianness independence as inevitable and this war as tennoconversity contiv.

No assent had the Virtness was stopped than the Algerian was started. It was to last over seven years, from November 1954 to Pebruary 1962, and we shall have to return to it in the sent chapter. The unused revolt of the Algerian Front de Liberation Nationals.

(FLN) began on the 1st November, and two days later, Leon Petr. a. Polisbureau member, wrose in L'Humanist that France should accords to the legitimete demands for liberty of the Algerian people. Whereas all other parties stuck to the idea that Algeria was a French province and that L'Algerie, c'est la France, the PCF mained that Algeria was a prparate meson, with its own customs and culture, and that L'Aleiras, c'est l'Aleiras. As in the case of Vietnam, the party's support was expressed through its propagands, mass ections and partnersentary activity. But Algeria presented two special problems, first, the presence of one mallion Prench settlers, nicknamed les grads name, and secondly, the fact that the FLN did not only conduct guilitary operations against the French army but also resorted to acts. of undividual terrorium against French soldiers and French civilians. The goods more were a problem because they regarded themselves as French, whereas the PCP had said, as far back as 1939, that they, together with 'twenty races' (Arabs, Berbers, Jews, etc.), were part of 'the Alasman nature at the process of focusation' (This process, ancidentally, was said to have been completed as the 1940s and the party spoke of 'the Alazzma nation in strendy constituted', of le fast national algéries) Morover, although the étade news wented Alaeris to rumain French, they were not all right-winners, for about one fifth of them regularly voted Communist. To its credit, the PCF ded not allow this electoral consideration to take precedence over its principles, and it stack to its view that the Algerian mation was entitled to independence. It is true that the word 'independence' was often replaced by each phrases as 'the Algerian people's right to settle their own affairs', but that was partly done in order to 'sell' the idea of independence gradually to the French, and partly in order to avoid promoution and the secting and humanity of Communist papers, both of which happened frequently during the period anyway. As for and wide of the Party of the Party of the standard Community view*1 that it was counter-productive as it alienated the French people, whose support was crucial, and that the correct alternative was was a ground strength and make political work. The party also strength that the duty of French progressives was to work in France in order to was over public occasion in their own country and not to become mere adjuncts of the America FLN, this led Communists to reject the slogan taken up by Jession, Sortre and others, that one had 'to carry mutcesses for the FLN' (These people became known as les porseurs de values.)

The party's propagated on Algeria was control around two thouses. The first one was that the French coloradate deverty applicated the French people's feelings of 'kith and kin' links with Algeria but that their chief interest was Algerian ail and the acapamic and maktary control of Alaeria. The second one was the demandation of 'the darty war' wased on the Algerrans, which included extects on civilians by perstruction and the forture of princeurs by French army officers and NCOs, the larger was aronaly condemned in La Ouesnau, a book written by Henry Alten on the base of first-head knowledge (he himself had been increased as a French Communist helping the Algerrans) and which quickly became a bestseiler. When it came to action, the PCF rejected what it described as 'appreliant culti' for desertion and insubordination, and advocated instead agri-war propagainds in the army itself to well as among the civilians. To desert the army, it claimed, was to leave the mass of soldiers under the tole influence of 'reactionary' propagands. A large mamber of PCF meanbeen were accented and maked for their work as the army. Others were also harassed and arrested for their part in street demonstrations, the stoppens of trains carrying troops or war equipment, strikes and main meetings. Those meetings were frequently busied. Eventually, the French people got suck and tired of a war they could not win, and this trim reflected up the stand taken by pointscal parties such as the SFIO and the Radicals, both of which advocated associations rather than war. The PCF took this is a vandention of its own stand.

The PCF's unternal life during the cold-way decade was charactersed by a membership decline and by landership problems. In 1945-6, the son of one million members had been confidently forecast, and the secretarist even claused to have somed that many cards, but they were not all taken up 42 By 1956 the membership figure descended to about 400,000, which represented a 50 per cent has or more. What was especially disturbing was that the loss had occurred in workingcless error. Among the many reasons for this downward trend, out must mention the government's repression and noti-Communist propagands, the political and industrial uplat of the left, the party's own sectamenum (frequently denounced but always reoppouring), and also the political apathy of the period which hit all parties and not only the PCF (The SFIO lost about two-thirds of its members.) The first leadership problem accurred in October 1950, when Maurice Thorax had a sudden stroke which provoked paralysis of his right limbs. A month later he went to the Soviet Union for trustment and remained there until April 1953. As we have seen, eacther temper was also obsent for a while, though not for as long, and that was Duclos, who went to sail in 1952. Partly because of the - but only partly - the party strong from right-wing 'opportunism' to left-wing 'nectarinasm' and vice versa, with the result that its influence among the working class millional considerably. For a Communism party nothing worse could happen. It is against this background that the purpos of Morty. Tallon and Luccour took place.

The Marty-Talkon 'affer' shook the party in 1941, At first, the two men were removed from the Polithureau, then from the Central Committee, and in 1953 Marty was expelled from the party. To the political case against him were added the charge of "factionshim" and the ratual charge of bonne a police gay. The farst of these was difficult. to substantiate, for at was hard to prove conclusively that Marty's talks. with other critics of the leadership resilv amounted to the formation of an organised group within the party, which is what "factionshim" focuse. As for the second charge, it was quate indicrous and rested on nothing more than the fact that Marry's brother, a freemance, was friendly with the Prefect of Police, also a freemason! One must however remember that police infultration did take olice during the period, or at any rate was attempted, and this easy bein to explain the party's nervousiers, without in the least condoming it. The approach to Tillou was different, largely because he hamself decided not to make a firm and to return pracefully to his home values and devote homself to inerary work. (He was eventually expelled in 1970 315 The political case assume Marry and Tillon is practically uninsellutible to a mon-Communist and even to a modern Communist as so much terrors. was used. The whole 'affair' remains unclear to this day, but one can sidely assume that in addition to personality challes. Marty in particufor was very arrogant and embelsons). 44 the two leaders, who undoubtodly had some laste tendencies, were chosen as acanemats in the fight mount sectorsouss.

In 1954 another top leader, Lacobur, was attached and purgod. As Organisation Socretary, he was accused of having shown himself authoritorius, supercelly as dealing with intellectuals, " and of having tried to gain control of the party by appointing a number of 'political instructors', one for every cell, who were directly accountable to himself. The second charge was foctually true, but it must be used that the Polisburous had given its blessing. In June 1954 Lecour was replaced by Mercel Servis and suspended for a year. After the publication extron of a book which he defaultly entitled L'Auto-criteque attendue and which included variant actacks on Thorex, on Jeanartte Vermouveh (Thorex's wife) and Duchin, he was floally expelled in November 1953. There is limit doubt that Marry, Tallon and Lacorus note cold-var cannalism. The Pt. It fall that is was at wer and that it could not tolerate any doublection within its ranks. This, however, is in explanation, not a syntalication. It is unlikely that any modern Prench Cannational would wish to defend the party's action, even if he facilitate that the polarical criticisms of the disordens were valid, and it is apparaisent that in subsequent years* the removal of top landers was achieved in a more balanced way.

The PUF held three congresses during the cold wer. The rith emgress, held in June 1947, was dominated by the metalous behelf that the party would some return to the government, and as fact ended with shoun of Thirtie an powers. The twelfth congress, held in Aged 1940, focused on the struggle for purcy. The haynous was that "peace hance by a thread", but also that was is not inevitable and can be aversed by mass acrean. The 13th congress, held in June 1954, tech. place in the cold war was very slowly beginning to be replaced by 'parceful co-contains' and against the lankground of the PCP's bound encourage as a grambin of fields. A potentially impact of this hast congress was its attention to cultural matters and its proclaimed process of 'dogmestics' 4' The physicist foliot-Curve abuses for brokh resease) must a memour which ended with the words. If any proud to bulong to such a party', and the past, Aragon, advected in greet account art', which was not meant to be the discursion of day-to-day dogam, but required to long-turn perspective, which in that of the nation, and in which the working class increasingly identifies itself with the notion'.

An assument of the PCP's 1947-35 period most avoid over simplification, because the phrase 'cold-war gircto', although beneally accurate, assule to be qualified. The party's stand on point, Gormany, Vertness and Algeria, passed Communists a corrase amount of understanding and sympathy. More amportantly from a Markin point of view, disputs stress shortcurring to its work and at times to matheby to gauge the real moud of the popular mouse, the PCF kept working-class malatimety at a high, challenging level, which looks the Communist histories Roger Martells to assert that 'in this difficult period also, the PCF played a passive role in the development of the working class and of Franch messay.  Plantly, severds the and of the period, a 'New Left' had come into being, whose aims and philosophy. were very different from those of the PCF (some of its members could even be described as anti-Communities), but which at least attempted. in its own way, to reject the policies of the past. The emergence of the 'New Left' must be seen in conjunction with Mendes-France's 'New Deal' experiment (selective state intervention to assist the moderniaation of French industry), an experiment which led to the belief that there could be such a thing as 'progressive capitalism' happily evolving into socialism. The PCF, of course, had no time for the concept of 'progressive capitalism', which it denounced as a myth, but it was careful not to close the door on a possible rapprochement with the 'New Left' Writing in the May 1955 made of the Cahiers do Commanusme. Francous Billoux asserted that this novel trend included people who were 'honestly seeking agreement with the Communist Party', and he pledged that, for its part, the PCF would 'help every step forward which will lead to a change of policy'.

Recovery begins (1956-7)

The year 1956 started on a hopeful note for the PCF, because in January the General Election returned a left-wing majority, in terms of both votes and seats. Admittedly, there had also been a disturbingly high number of votes given to a new right-wing 'populist' movement, led by Poujade, which claimed to represent the interests of 'the small man', but on the whole, Communists looked upon the results (which are shown below) as quite encouraging:

		Percentage of
PCF SFIO Radicula	Voces 5,454,589 3,180,656 2,876,394	25,4% 14,8% 13,4%	Seate 146 (+51) 89 (- 6) 70 (- 7)
MRP Gaulints Poujadats Independents	2,374,221 948,854 2,451,555 3,451,664	11% 4.4% 11.4% 16.2%	71 (-13) 17 (-13) 51 100 (+13)

Thus, the three left parties had an absolute majority of votes (53.6 per cent) and of seats (305 against 239 for their opponents). This led both Communists and the non-Communist left to argue that their respective stands had been vandicated. The PCF and that there was in fact a 'Popular Front majority', which was arithmetically true, even though the Radicula were split into supporters of Mendès-France and followers of Educy Fours; but the non-Community replied that the country had resocted left wang 'extremosa' (the PLF) as well as right wang 'entrement' (Poujade), so that the attention called for the formation of a moderate 'Republican Front', made up of the SFIO, the Radscals, and those Gaullats who called themselves the Republi-60000 Sections. Whether that was indeed what the country wented, the fact remeans that, in the words of P. M. Withiams, 'the Republican Front was sever within sight of an independent majority' " All the some, the SFIO decided to go ahead with it, and Cray Mollet formed a Republican Front government. The PCF, which had wantd the electoral campaign under the alogan, 'For a new Popular Proof', decided to vate for Mollet in Parlachest. A more controversal vote accurred on 12 March 1996 when Moller saked for 'special powers' so deal with Algeris and egain was supported by the PCF. The party explored its stend by saying, first, that it contigued to oppose the test of force, and accondly, that it was crucial to prevent a collision between the SFIO and the right. The trouble was that this collector had already started: after his vasir to Algiery on 6 February, Mollet yielded to right-wing pressure and decided to pursue the wor with greater vision. To this effect, he began by dominance the Rendent-General he had benealf appointed, General Catroux, and to replace hop with Robert Lecoste, a tougher man, although he was a Socialist. In any case, the PCF's hope that the 'special powers' would be used agreement the raghet proveed unfounded, and one may arrow that the party had been incredibly herve in thinking that they could have been used otherwise than against the F LN. On the other hand, it was true that the SFIO was deeply devided on the Algerian more and that many runk-and-filers uncerely favoured a pencetal solution. That the PCF leadership was not too happy about its March year was shown in June. when the party parliamentary group decided to abotion when Mollet taked for a vote of confidence. At the meeting which preceded the vote, a substantial number of Community deputies had advacated exposing the government, but in the end, the decision to obstain was taken almost unansmously.

Not only had the PCF fulled at home, but external developments in 1996 brought new difficulties for the party. The first of these was the denuncation of Stalin at the acth congress of the L.PSU, held in Pebraary. The addition to an internal crisis, the PCF had to face attacks, many of which comowhat pustified whatever their motives, for having blindly followed Moscow in the past. Worse was to come when, in November, Soviet tanks occupied Budapest and thus put as end to the revolt against the regime. Finally, almost at the same time, came 'the Suez adventure', i.e. the attack on Egypt which Britain, France and Israel jointly launched at the end of October as a punitive measure against Namer, who had just astronaheed the Suez canal. The attack was a fisaco because the three governments were criticised by the UN, the USA and the USSR, and had to withdraw their troops, but the PCF was unable to get real support for its anti-government stand because, on the whole, 'the nation'. was found interest in politics', '12 as Professor Cobban remarks. Indeed, spart from the Communists, it was only the armed forces which were highly critical, because they felt deeply humiliated. Hardly a basis for an alliance with a political perty, least of all the PCF!

In 1957 further conflicts occurred, first over the EEC, which the PCF described as 'a capitalist alliance' and a threat to France's sovereignty, ⁵³ and then over developments in Algeria, where the purtuants of Algéria française were blaming the Paris rulers for their 'weakness' in waging the way. For its part, the PCF complained that the government was showing 'weakness' in dealing with 'the fascist threat' and that it was afraid of 'mobilising the people' against it. That successive French governments were indeed weak over Algeria – in both directions – is a fact, and it is one of the main remons why de Gaulle was able to return to power in 1958. As we shall see, this event interrupted the PCF's gradual recovery. For in 1956, its membership had gone up, its 14th congress had guardedly started the de-Stalinisation process, and its electoral support, mostly from dynamic industrial areas and from young people, was quite encouraging. The Fifth Republic temporarily put in end to all that

Into battle: The PCF against the Gaullist Fifth Republic (1958-68)

The both of the Fafth Republic was preceded by a maistary coup at Almers on 13 May 1958. A group of officers and colour! formed a "committee of public safety" and threatened to take power in Paris, by masse of civil war if accusary. The government, headed by Pfluxius (MRP), was struck with terror and was only too relieved when de Goalle offered homself as a 'savrour'. The PCF tried to 'mobilise the people' against how, especially through the 38 May demonstration, which was widely supported despite a last-minute SFIO refusal to take part, but de Goulle was elected Prane Manater by Parlament by 320 votes to 224. He immediately formed a broad adversament, in which he included the SFIO, and announced that he would hold a referendum to find out if the people wanted a new constitution. The referendate two held in September and nearly 80 per cent of those who cast their votes backed the general by enewering Yes. In November the legislative electrons gave the pro-de-Camile parties. (practically all parties, manus the PCF) 78.4 per cost, including 17.5 per cent to the new Gauliet party, the Union pour la Nouvelle République (UNR) la December, an electoral collège appointed de Goulle as President of the Republic by 62,000 votes against 10,000 for Marrane (PCP) and 6,700 for Chatclet (a Mendeaust). In Jaguary, the new President made Machel Debet his first Prime Manager. but the SPIO left the government in precent against its contarity

The advent of the Fifth Republic posed three problems to the PCF – first, the assure of the Goullast regime, its immediate significance as well as its impact on the party's struggle for incubion, succeeding how to light against it, especially, how to build a united left opposition to it and as the same time how to recover the ground loss by the PCF by initiating mass struggles and improving Communist electoral work, with the supplican on the first, and finally, how to change the party litter, in terms of its internal life, its short-term and long-term prop-remote, and its relations with the international Communiar movement, in order to make it equal to the pask. Until 1968 the PCP's bartle against Gaulhum went through three stages (in the course of which all the above problems had to be tackled), which will be briefly enumered in turn, the 1963-62 stage of adjustment and re-adjustments to a novel situation, the 1963-6 stage of mostering the forces of the Opposition, industrially and politically; and the 1963-6 stage of open bartle, culminating in the revole of May 1968. It must be stressed that throughout these stages, the PCP's attitude was dictated partly by its own analyses and instantives, and partly by events outside its custrol, such as the changes taking place in France (some-economic and political), the stand taken by other political forces (both the party's long-standing measure on the right and its potential allies on the left), and the international attention.

For a Marxist party the most important new developments were the socio-economic changes. The trend towards greater industrial and financial concentration and towards increased state intervention. which had beens under the Fourth Republic, became even more trenounced under the Fifth. The modernmotion of French industry. proceeded at a faster pace, and as the country's dependence on foreign and dimmushed, its foreign policy tended to become more andependent. (This is not to my that de Goulle's own ideas about France's role in the world did not also play a part in this last respect, but even non-Marxists will concede that there was a coincidence between his semi-mystical vision and the more mandate interests of landing French bunkers and industrialists.) State economic plans become increasingly drawn up by inchaocrats and exports, and Professor Cobban, who thinks that this was 'a necessary condition of economic and social progress', adds nevertheless that the masse employed "harnely by-passed the portrol processes of potence". He also writes that ' . . . the directors and managers of private enterprise and their appeared numbers in the Commissioner du Pion had the same intellecfinal background and outlook, spoke the mane language, and fargely envisesed the same ends' 4 French Marxists were quick to interpret such facts as evidence that the state was now controlled by but business. Moreover, as had happened before 1948, modernseation and industrialisation did not benefit all social classes to the same extent. The modest wase rosp did not been up with inflotion and with higher productivity, so that when the acunomic boom began to slow down, there were many action of French society which classed that they were badly treated' * On the occological ada, the most agasticant change was that there was now an overwhelming majority of miaraid workers (including blue and white collar workers), 73-7 per cent of the working population by comparison with do per cent in 1954, according to the 1963 census. The same census revealed that there had been a agasticant moreone in the aumbur of those surployed by the processing and clothing industries, the public actor, the anxion inclustry, and the banking and institution firms, and that the number of miaraid women had going up by 14.7 per cent to against 9-5 per cent for mon. The PCF showed itself much more aware of all these changes than it had been in the 1950s, and at its 17th congrues, held in 1964, it triad to relate the party's policy to the changes in French society.

From the political point of view, the chief acceptly introduced by the Pifth Republic by in the constitutional field. The Goullet constitution, although it was actually drawn up by Machel Debré, embodied the views which de Goulle himself had pur forward as far back as road. namely, a strong executive and a reduced rule for Parliament. In the afterwark of the Reputance and the Liberation, most political parties had objected to these features, and de Gaulle had had so resums, as 1958, the PCF was the only party which continued to object, whilst non-Communist apposition came mainly from individuals and materials within left, centre and even right wing parties. The opponexts of the new regime, especially the PCF, were highly critical of the President's increased powers, according to Article 8 of the constatution, at is he who appoints the Prime Manuser and who presides ever cobsect meetings. Article 12 gives have the right to by-pure the National Assembly and appeal directly to the people by means of a referendum; and Article 16 allows here to agree Perhament if he thanks that there is an emergency. As for Partnersent, it meets twice a year only, for easity days in the first place and for not more than sensity days in the second place. Proportional representation is abalished and is replaced with the single-member system with two ballots. The Community complaint that the Pithb Republic connectation was tailor mode to sun the interests of the piete seemed ample metabed until 1961, but munically, after Mattermost's rectors the same constitution appeared to much in the left's famour?

Instally, all major French political parties welcomed de Gaulle, with the enception of the Communicate, of course, however, right from the start, many of them had reservations or magazings, and as time went on, these led to new party alsoments. On the right, the most dynamic force was the Goullist party, the UNR, at first, it was manamous in normaryedly supporting de Gaulle, but by 1961, although the main asine of his policy were not chellenged, criticisms were voiced concerning the reduced role of Parliament. The other nete-wine party, which included Third Republic and Pourth Republic manamen, such as Reynaud and Piney, differed from the Goulhers chiefly because they spoke on behalf of medium and small businessmen. They called themselves the Contra Namonal des Indòpendance at Paysant (UNIP). On the left, the main parties were the Radical party, the MRP, the SFIQ and the PCF. The first of these had decimed after the fall of the Third Republic, but it regarded some influence under the Fifth, it was notted to its arachment to traditional purlamentary forms, but on nearly all other seven, it was split into various tendencies. The MRP, after having earned for itself the reputation of being de Guille's most faithful supporter, soon found itself unhappy about the new government's social, occasions; and political measuring at started to long vision in the 1962 General Election, and by the end of the rotos, at had disappeared as a party, to be replaced by the Gentre des Démocrates Sociaux, or CDS. On the left, the SEIO continued to be the PCF's chief rival, but its aredominantly middle-class composition, in Fourth Republic record, its metal support for de Goulle, and the distincts without its ranks were all handscape which the Communists exploited to the full. We shall see in the rest of this chapter how the new political alignments affected the PCF.

But firm a few words about the interactional arraction. In some respects, the external developments of the 1958-66 period greatly helped the PCF, but some were a source of embarranement and difficulties. On the positive side, the most important feature was that 'panteful co-examinor' had succeeded the cold war. Aithough quart a few cross occurred (of which the most immons was the 1963 Caban crum), the habit grew to suitle disputes uround the conference table. Khrushchav's diplomatic autostives and popular style tandoù to improve the image of communion. De Goulle's foreign policy, although based on what the PCF called 'big power politics', involved batter relaxions with the USSR and some opposition to the USA (as 1966 France amounced she would withdraw from NATO). On the negative side, the war in Vietnam (admittedly waged by the USA and not by France this time), the Sam-Soviet dispute and the occupation of Cauchoslovakia by the Warasw Pact troops were probably the assess which gave the PCF its gravest headsches, the first one because it threatened to take the world back to the cold war deviana into two camps, the second one because it shuttered the illumin that 'nocular countries' are bound to luve framily relations, and the last one because it represented a great power 'duktor' imposed on a small factors.

Adjustments and re-adjustments (1948-61)

The new features of the Condian regime were in themselves a sufficient fustification for a detailed Community analysis, but the party's octback at the September 1948 referendum and at the November General Election made a even more imperative to arrive at a proper understanding of the novel era which had started and showed every sign of harmer. The fact that 80 our cent of the votes cost had anne to de Costile. meant that the Pt. It had lost at least one-difficult state additional electors (if not one-third when one includes those who shatained). The loss of one and a half makes votes in the Lienera, Election and the mesare percentage of 18.0 per cent further stressed the seriousness of the Communitation to the party wasted no time in acknowledging that, and at the CC meeting held as October - before the legislative elections - Marcel Servis did not since his words and and that mothers like that had happened since the liberation. He then accounted for de Gualle's vactory by mying that the 'state apparatist' (especially the army, and the media had been wholly on his side, that he homeelf had explosted both his wartung presture and his selfpractained ability to evert civil wer, and above all, that many prople, frustrated because they had yound left muthout sender, had turned to him in the hope that he would make a closp swarp of the past. Thorsis followed Servin and stressed that there was no unity among the Yes. votors, and he confidently forecast that contradictions among them would uses explode and that allumous would soon vanish. In the meanture, the new resume was a fact, and it was accessary to understand its class basis in order to assess its political aims in territo of institutions, colonial policy and foreign policy.

The PCF was the only party which, right from the start, drew a distinction between the transcast aspect of Gaullium – a solution to the Algerian problem – and im more lasting feature – a major reorganisation of French included and political life. Its immediate verdict on the regime was that it represented the rule of big business, and the phrase

'personal rule on behalf of the monopoles' was consistently manitained to man up in a nutribell the Communist assessment of Goodham. What did very and gave rise to heatstines and controverses was the narry's views concerning the extent to which de Goulle could be called a fracut and the autorizance of the internal contradictions among the social forces which becked him. On the first some, the party wavered between equating Gaulkara with fascings pure and sample and between the formulation that de Gaulle's dictatorship paves the way for factsum' In the end newher assessment prevailed, and the PCF preferred to regard the presidential regime instituted by the Fifth Republic or one which best sured the contraband stage reached by French capitalism. but not as one which involved the forcible destruction of working declass and democratic opposition. For the party had come to behave that the Prench ruling class did not need - as yet - a fractat dictatorshap, and counsquestly that, despute all its regressive aspects, Goullcan had not closed the door on the pumbibly of fashung for a 'restoration and renewal of democracy', which became the party's immediate smal. A December 1948 joint PCF-PCI Declaration specslically americal that the new resome in France was 'totalizarian' but was different from 'fascum of the classic type'; however, the PCP 15th congress, held an months later in June 1959, ended with a resolution which described Gaulisson as 'the rule of the monocolles' and as 'a presidential regime oriented towards personal dictionrahipand opening the way to fascism'.6

What finally convenced the PCF that Goullisen, deserte its authorfaring and 'unti-democratic' character, was not a new turnest of fraction was a number of developments in 1960-1 which showed where the real facent threat by. The advar, who had autually backed de Goulle in the hope that he would keep Algeria French, felt they had been let down when in November 1960 the general announced his intention to offer the Algerians 'self-determination', and got 75 feet cent of the voters to support him in the January 1962 referendum. (As people were asked to epprove both self-determinating and new Algerian institutions by decree from Paris, the PCF had advected voting No.) In April 1961 four high-ranking generals extensived a pursely so ourst de Goulle, and in the same mooth the OAS (Ornansamon de l'Armée Secrete) revenied its existence by claiming responsubdity for the terroristic attacks on democrats and historia of all kinds. The 16th PCF congrues (June 1961) gave malthe aquation Continue-forcions, but it blamed 'the government of the monopower'

for having made provible 'the malmary fracist rebellion of an April' by its imagest troopide 'factions atomorph'

The most apportest event which give cut to at atternal controverse water the PCF on the more of the French betreevene's granude invente de Gentle was Pinor's rengesation from the government in January 1960. Wherein Marcel Servin, supported by Laurent. Commove, new this is great that sections of big business had withdrawn their margers for the regime, the rost of the budership repised that Pency represented the non-geomegatist on times of the benegonaly and that has deporture had made the Gautine government more convicuary, not less. The majority on the C.C also criticised Service and a mumber of party accommen for behaving that Goulling angesand the atterests of the 'nationalus' want of the bourgoone rather than those of the multinormani firms. At the January 1962 C.C mosting a resolution was advoced which declared that internal controdistricts within the French ruban class to well as inter-imperialist contradartions' reportably those horough France and the USA cortruly extend but were less apportune than the main contradiction between capital and below made each capitalist country and horways importained as a whole and 'the forces of democracy and unculum'. All this was not a purely academic guession. Believing that some of the gemagnica were agreest de Carello, Servas had approved some doubt about the party's wondom in voting against the nuclear strike force, wheler Canadiove (influenced, it was easi, by the progressive Catalant' Emmanuel d Anter de la Vigoros laid magnitud that a loss acceptagent arounds on the PC P's part angin investigated de Genile to carry out a hetter techni pulsey. Theres thought this was a designment thusans, and he turer rold Coreurs. "Can one amagine de Coude en a-"ment man"? It mends like a rate: " As there were also discovered to 4wir Commove a rate in the Pence Movement,4 the tendership decided to remove the row men from the Central Committee. However, and the was a uge that tamps had changed - portlay of these was valided and especial from the purry forein later bucasis acting District Socretory in the Monetle Paddromon, and L. Humanist published a framily obstury when he dead as 1968. As he Caspreys, he removed a renh-end-feer, but when he died in 1973 La Neumolie Critique reculed to past services porticularly in the cultural flaid, and called Juon 'n proot soslitant'.

Although the PCP had lost a great mapy of its traditional supporture us a result of de Goulle's transplant constant, it did not thanh that it had lost them for greer, and it mid as as early as October 2018. when the CC met to ducum the referendum results. In subasquent weeks, it set itself the task of reamping its lost ground by stepping upits 'moss work, and by making use of all democratic channels, includint electrons and Parliament. The former was bound to take procedence over the latter, not only because it is mandard Community practice to put 'the mass movement, first, but she because the party's parliamentary representation had been reduced to ten easis in November 1958, which means that it could not even constitute stielf to an independent group to the Assembly. The first protest actions in which the PCF played a mojor role occurred in 1949 and were caused by the uncopular government decrees curtashing Social Security benefits. A petition organized by the CGT and the other policies. gathered half a makes segmetures, and in the end the government gave as, withdrawing its Social Security legislation and even increasing family allowances by 10 per cent. The PCF drew the moral that 'muss. struggles can compel the regime to retreat. On wanes, however, the government was adament and set a 3 per cent hans on all wage more Whan the radwaymen struck in protest in June 1959, they were forced back to work by threats of eastern drammal and by the 'requisitioning' of the radways, i.e. by making calway work a form of computatory notional service. They remand their bettle by striking some in May 1960, and that time won a wage increase. Other workers followed past, meanly the numers and those working in the steel, transport and textile industries. A mentionar number of white collar workers and technicame also came out. The PCF Polathurers called on all Commissions. to be the best fighters 'to the great struggles waged by the working class and the whole of our people. It was also in 1460 that there were protests among the persons and atomic teachers, the latter observing to state grants for Cathoric schools. In 1961 and in 1963, the PCFmaximal demonstration occurr the OAS and the "faccut threst" enabled the party to establish erass-roots halts with Socialist and other prochars.

In the elections field, the PCP's recovery bugun with the 1999 manucipal elections. The Communist parcentage at the first bullet was an encouraging 29 per cent, and at the second bullet there were some PCF-SFIO lasts in about fifty sowns, despite the SFIO lendership's refusal to canclude national electoral agreements with the Communistis. In the January 1964 referendum de Goulle get 420,000 fewer vous than in 1958, and the number of absenceous rose to marrly orwer.

million, which the PCF welcomed as proof that apposition to the regate was growner. That was over-optimistic on its part, or it associate fact that obstentions conscally stem from anothy. In 1963, there were three further electoral consucts. The first was a referendum. on the Event Agreements which find not greated Aleers for full independence. Although the PCF school to was enthumenc about de Goulle's new stand, regarding it rother as the proof that 'the monopolism are ready to excretion some of the colons' interests in order to try and retain control of [Alaems a] weakly, especially the School oil', it advanted voting Yes, and in this it was on the same aide as all other parties except the excreme noist and the extreme left." (Du-Gaulle not up per cent of the votes cast,) The second contest was smother referenders, held in October about de Genille's wish to get the President of the Republic elected by unround suffrage. The disputity in the Assembly, including the PCF, were not in favour, and the Communiots channed that 'a ploburcite is not a democratic procedure' because 'in such an enterprise, universal suffrage is called upon to destroy mell. Despite the Assumbly's apposition, de Geulle obtained 61 75 per cent of the vates care. This was a per loss of 17 5 per cent by comparison with 1948, and by taking alwestions uno account the P.C.F. declared that the YES value represented only 46.5 per cent of the electorate, and that this was 'a corrows defeat for personal rule'.

On the strength of the referendant results and in accrete to the National Assembly's coming of the povergenest, de Goulle called for a General Electron, which was held in November. The Goullet UNR presented past into with the UDT (Umon Domocratique du Traves), made up of 'left-wing' Goullists), and together they got 31.9 per cout at the first ballot and 233 costs at the second ballot. For the left, the first ballet gave at 10 per cont to the PCP, 12 64 per cost to the SFIO, and 1.71 per cent to the Reducals, and other the accord belief. the PCF had at mote, the SFIO 66, and the Radicals 10,19 The PCF's electoral taction, described by Waldsch Rochet as 's deepening and a development of the United From Incire', were based on the principle of withdrawal in favour 'of the Republican candidate' who was best placed to defeat the Guilliats. By 'republican', the party menat all anni-Goullists, and in Dyon, for example, it withdraw in fevent of Canon Kir. 6 'progressive' Cathelic priest. A memficial femore of the electrons was the do faste assets of the left between the treabilities, illustrated by the number of aid for agreements on mutual. densiements, which benefited all the three parties. In this respect

November 1963 marked the beginning of the PCF's numberation into the nation's political life.

In its internal afe the PCF also showed agos of gradual recovery in the 1958-63 period. After kining many members in 1956-7 because of the events in the international Communist movement*1, it gradually began to gain new ones. Above all, the party's 1948 aethacks did not 5 demoralize the membership. In a sense, sweet were the uses of adverury, for the rank and file railied round the leadership and steeled themselves for the great battles shead. Neither the 15th congress. 1959) not the 16th 1961 revented any aigns of unrest, at any rate not on the surface. Both these congresses were also important as landmarks in the PCF's evolution. Organisationally, the 15th compress ratified some agnificant leadership changes, in particular Waideck Rochet's promotion to the accretariat, Georges Marchais a election to the Pointburens, and Roland Leroy's election to the Central Committee. Printigally, it adopted a draft programme a med at 'restoring and renewang dominance, which was interesting, first, because it spoke of an ashence between the working class and other social groups rather then of the sitter ranging around the former, which was the 14th congress formulating, and seconds. Secause such a draft concarned in embevo the idea of a common government programme on which the left could agree. The stress on the importance of the 'bortle for democracy' was equally sugarficant, even if at this early stage there was no clear realization of the way as which the democratic bettle can lead to socialism. In this last respect, a modern Communist historian, Roger Bourderon, speaks of a hactus between the immediate objective , renewed democracy) and the long-term one (socialism), as well as between the end and the means' 11 Fanally, the 15th congress resolution laid special emphasis on the party a undependent activity in a precondition for its ability to contribute to the building of popular unity. The need for such unity was the main theme of the 16th congress. The final resolution committed the party to co-operation with 'other democratic parties, both is order to restore and renew democracy and to build accustom, and it restfirmed the formula of the previous congress, which was also that of the 1930s. At all costs, tinited front of the working class. At all costs, unity of the working class and the middle classes. In his closing speech Thores reasserted the Community' attachment to unity and revived the old dogue. Ecorner neus ce que devesa, na tenar compre que de ce que unet. Put neede all that which divides, take account only of that which unives).

He also repeated that in the PCP's view war was not inevitable and that a perceial transition to socialism was still possible.

The buttle commences (1963-4)

With the Algorian quantics out of the way after the 1980 Bries. performant, and with its own closers accomment of the key to advance under the Comilian regions (broad unity to achieve a 'new' democracy), the PCF set to work to 'mobiles' the people and to reach agreement with other political forces which were opposed to Goutham. From 1464 assureds, it instanted and/or supported the countless strikes which teels place (see mathem earshe days in 1963 according to official Statuture), engageably the March-April 1963 majors' strike, the Maylune make of Parsons underground workers, and the November strake as the subjec services. It also supported protest actions in the countrysale and teachers' demonstrations against education cuts. It escaped to the party that its 16th congress had been sustified in saving that 'conditions are ripening for removing the present regime. The guernary ment and political forces egist. Unfortunately from the purty's point of view, the 'political forces' may have expited, but they touk a long tour to get together for point action. The first half of 1962 mw Molier's attempt to revive the 'Third Force' without the Commeants and the widening of the doctrinal gulf between Socialists and Community at the May $P1O congress, which defined capitalism as a system in which surplus value is 'unfairly distributed', it followed that the task was not to abolish private property (the long standing men of all Marants) but to share the sistane's wealth more equatably Undetered, the Pt.F continued to multiply its appeals for unity, and in September the Poirbureau meanined that the two mortune-close parties should 'march side by side and strike together'. Marchine cate it is come at frapposts assemble. The appeal was headed at grass-roots level and not antirely squared at the Ducembay marting of the SFIO council, which heard Moties declare that unity of the whole left was pended at order to defeat the right, and has colleague, (majer, main't that the French left was 'powerlass' wethout the PCF, but would be 'depressed' if it co-operated with it. At its May-June 1964 congress, the S F I O agreed to defensive united action with the Community.

However, the main proccupation or that congress was Gaston Defferre's leanching of the idea of a non-Communit left 'Federation', extending from the SFIO to the centre parties, and for this renew aucknowed 'Big Federation'. When in February 1984 the

S F1O chase Defferve as an previdencial condidate for the 1964 election, it looked as if the door had been closed on a reportschappent with the Communists. But in the toring of 1964, the 'Bug Federation' idea collapsed, as the M R P refused to be included unless the other parties drupped their ecoestion to state aid for Catholic schools and unless they clearly ruled out co-operation with the PCP. After that, things moved fairly fast. In June Defferre withdrew as ovendential condidute, in September Princips Matternand replaced him and offered to stand on behelf of the left as a whole, and in the same mouth, the 'small' Federation was formed and took the name of Federation do la Genche Democrate at Socialiste (FGDS), It was made un of the $710, the Radicals and a number of left-wine clubs, of which the most againment was Matterrand's own C1R (Convention des Justitiomons Republicannes), which had formally asked all the other parties to set up the FGDS. Matterrand stood on the basis of a seven-point programme, and although this was not the common programme demanded by the PUF, the party thought it was the next best thing and decaded to support hum. He, for his part, murdedly declared that he would welcome Communist minuters in a left government. 14 When the presidential election was held [December 1965], de Goulle fusied to get an absolute motority at the first ballet (44.7 per cent agentat 32.3 per cost for Matterrand and 15.0 per cost for Lecusort) and not as at the second bullet by the skee of his torth (54 5 per cent against 44.4 per cent for Metterrand). The PCF ground the results as proof that the Gautiot runne had been 'shakened and weakened', and it added that 'its defeat will now depend on the success of joint actions' Reg the first time made 1947 the Communists were part of a 4 and manners, that could read up ally built forward to inchory in the mine Justice

The party's 17th congress, held a year earlier in May 1964, had already equipped it for its new rule because of the further changes it made to its approach and to its organisation. Waldack Rochet protented the opening report and called for 'anity for a penume democracy. The phrase 'genuses democracy' had a double significance. First, by using a mineral of 'the restoration of democracy', the party attended to look to the future rather than the root, as already demanded by Thores in 1962. Secondly, 'paptions democracy' was presented to a stage on the road to socialism. Modern Communist historians feet that the notion of stages was unadequate and that it is more current to speak of a continuous process, but it was all the same a great advance for the PCF to percurve at lest, albeit at a general way. the lasks between the present and the future. On the key question of left many, Waldeck Rochet admitted the importance of the differencus between Socialists and Community, but claimed that both parties had changed sufficiently to make these loss service. In particufar, the PCF's stress on peaceful transition to socialism had rendered obsolete the SF1O's lone-translate obsertion that the Communities mented violence. That had never been the case, the speaker mantained, but now it was less true then ever. Equally obusine was the obsection that the PCF favoured a one-party system under socialism. Waldech Rochet, recalling that the 16th congress had already rejected. the one-party system, added. 'This idea, supported by Stalin, constituted as anyermented generalisation of the specific circumstances mader which the October Revolution took place.' Unity between Communious and Christians was also stressed, aspecially as the Papal. encyclical. Paceru in Tayra, had expended to all men of mod will. believers and unbelievers. Finally, Waldeck Rochet's outright condemnation of the alter-left Mapost last was not only agradient at showing support for Khrushchev against Mao in the international Communist debate, but also as a further indication of the PCF's commitment to a democratic read to socialism. With its 17th congress the PCF entered a new phase in its history, one which opened up greater perspectives, but which was not frue from problems, in substquent developments were to show.

The 17th congrues was also important organisationally because it adopted new Rules for the first time since 1945. These were introduced by Georges Marchair, who had taken over from Servin as National Organism. Greater emphasis was put on the need for internal democracy and for better brunch life. For example, the first article no longer said that a party member 'undertakes to work in a party organisation', but samply used 'works', on the ground that a Communist's activity depended both on the individual and on the brunch. Two princips defined the rights and during of members and used that all were entitled to belp in shaping the party's policy by putting forward their own points of view at all levels. All leading budges were to be elected by secret ballot rather than by a show of hunds.

As the congrues ended, Thorex estad to be relieved of his post as General Secretary on grounds of age and health. He became party charmon and was replaced by Waldock Rochet. A few weeks inter, on 11 July 1964, he died, and his death left a great word in the PCF, although his successors were also men and women of experience and ability. In the Central Committee, elected at Congress by secret ballot, there were about twenty new members, another clear sign that a new era had started for the party. Pastvet's assessment of Thorez's role is that he "largely contributed to making the Communist Party "the first party at Prance", " but that is later years, he did not sufficiently laten to those who wanted a party that was still more 'open' and more willing to descrid obsolete aleas and practicus. Interestingly, this is also the view of the PCF historian, Roger Bourderon, ble prames Thorex for lawing always been 'it ease and bold" when tackling the problems of usery, but adds that his experience is this very field tended to prevent him from seeing how much things had changed since the 1930s and the 1940s. In particular, he did not sufficiently stress France's own road to socialism, despite his 'frequent references to the 1946 Times interview'.

Open conflict (1964-8)

The PCF's new look, which began in 1964-5, was reflected firm in the new impetus given to the party's adeological activity, accoundly as its relations with other parties, and finally in its electoral fortistics and mass work. Debutes between Marxista and non-Marxists were not new but almost as soon as de Stalinisation started, the stress was no longer on polement aggressiveness but on a genume dialogue. An priemor had been made in 1957 to hold a public debate between PCF. intellectuals and three prominent Jesusts (Fother Burn, Calvez and Chambre) who had written books on Marx and the USSR, but at the last strome the three priests refused to attend. In 1965 the Church's agenormamento() was already under way, and the PCF renewed its offer to hold public, friendly discussions between Communists and Catholics. This time the offer was accepted, and two debates took place in Nantas. April 1965). The first one was around the theme, 'Christians, Marxists, Rationalists, cun we change the world together, and if so, what must we change it ourselves?' The three participants were a Dominican pricer, a Communist, and a Socialist. Predictably, serious differences came to light, but two things were new, the willingness of each side to listen to the others, and the general agreement that co-operation was possible and describe. The other debate was about lascate (the socular state), and again there were three speakers, a Cathobe, a Communist, and a Socialist. These debutes were courteous without flattery, firm without intranspence.

Ideological activity maids the PCF melf was even more novel. Two new bodies, the CERM (Course of Randes et de Rocherches Maryuses) and the IMT (Institute Maurice Theres)16 encouraged the 'crustive ambention' of Marxison to a number of theoretical and even polynesi problems. Parry specialists also met in ad hec and advisory constitute and were intened to by the leadership. Genuice internal debutes took place, of which the most famous was the debute among philosophers and among writers and artists. The main difference concerned the best way of fighting Statumet degmettern. (Although, as we shall see in the next chapter, de-Stalementon had been sactally slow in the PCF, by the mad-1960s it was in full swing) Louis Although advected greater resentation agour, Roger Geraudy washed a closer reportchement with liberal humanum, and Lucien Sive called for a multile course. Althouser's most controversal views were his theory of "the equation closed break" (according to which there is a radical discontinuity between Marxines and all greyous philosophies. including that of Hearl), the distinction between exence and adoptory (according to which science alone provides objective knowledge, whilst ideology reflects human beings' experiences and governs their behaviour in a given necessy), and the starting assertion that Marxison IS 5 shootesteed auto-humanays (on the ground that 2 populs the abstract concept of man and speaks of measure). Germady's views were no less controvernal, and included the bubel that Marxison defines man presently as a 'creator' (which is also to Sertre's notice of 'the propert'), that hierary realous 'bee no leasts' (i.e. that even writers who are not expectably consided in 'reshest' display an original form of "realism"), and that there are sumerous 'convergences' among Christmas and Margaria. (Garandy bacaups a Christian, than a Musium, after has approximate from the PCF) As for Lucion Sive, he occured at first more concerned with defending Markist orthodoxy, but his 1969 back Marzume et Thèorie de la personnalité containe a munitit of erreson) ideas, sucluding the essentials that a 'concrete psychology' call and must be elaborated on the basis of instancel meterologic.

Debates and discussions about all these points were frequent from 1963 onwards, but the clamax cause in March 1966, when the CC met at Arpenteust for three days unstead of the customary two) and dealt exclusively with questions of ideology and culture. (Althouser, not a CC member, was not present, but fractandy and Sève ware.) It is impossible to give a full account of the spectage, 19 but one or two points desurve to be noted. For example, Michel Sunon, impourted by

Surer-Canala, suggested that 'easy-humanam', theoretical or otherwase, was an unfortunate phrase because it accredited the 'bourneous' ides that Communities did not care about human brings, it would be butter, the speaker sumarked, samply to my that 'Marxiem is not a speculative anthropology' and to stress, as Although had rightly done, that Mars resocted 'the obstruct idea of a busines owence which is independent of small relations. The final resolution supported Semon and asserted. 'There is a Margast humanum. Unlike the abstract burner, such which the bournouse holes occur relations and justafies explosision and investice, it stems from the historic task of the working class." On the same of the dialogue with Christians. Garandy was taken to trait by short participants for having good too. far. All praised his 'pronsuring work' but complained that he had too readily accepted the Christian division of mankind into believers and unbehavers as fundamental meteod of the Marziel devision into explosters and explosted. As he was a Pointbureau member, his views might have been taken for the party's views, and so it was important to but the record straight Lucien Seve accused him of confusing the dislogue with the attempt to find an impossible convergence between different doctrines. The purpose of the dialogue, he said, was mutual understanding and common action, not the reconclustion of the irreconcamble. He claimed that this was not intranagence, but plain intellectual honesty, and furthermore, that such honesty made for better relations, mace neither aide was decerving the other. Finally, on the asses of art and isternture, it was again Seve who attacked Garaudy when he said that his assumption that all great art was resisting that really doesnoted stock at amount that we can only admice works of art. if, tomehow or other, we can label them 'reshet'.

Shardy after the Argenteull morting, purty economies met at Chouse-le-Ros to engine and duction the new store of modern caracalsets at France, described at 'state monopoly capitalism to stress the increasingly clear aconomic and political leaks between the state and the monopoless. The result was that, eventually, a team of PCF economists produced what they called a Traise married af economia policique, La capitalisma manapolista d'état 26 Actually, the term 'trusties' chosen by the authors is comewhat madeschap, for this was not a release of Marton plantandes, but an agalysis (undoubtedly Moranet) of French realities, both in terms of state inservention in the ecutions and of changes in the position of various claims. The last point provided a theoretical basis for the PCP's policy of building as and-monopoly alliance by showing the existence of an objective comassumity of exterests among all non-monopoly sections of French society, despute amportant differences in their status, mits and statissis. It was understandable that the party should wish to stress the community of mecresos rather than the differences, but as later years the leadership stack felt that it had been one-aded in its combinant. However, the 18th PCF congress, which was held in January 1967, was phie to give a more concrete content to the policy of building pocular tensty 'for change' and to show, on the base of the party's theoretical. studies, that such a policy made sense.

The 18th congress was also able to regarder with introfaction the practical steps which had been taken in 1966 towards the building of left unity. At the beginning of the year, unity in the industrial fleid was expressed in the joint pledge to support workers' domaids taken by France's two largest unions, the CGT and the recently founded CFDT (Confederation Française Dimecratique du Travail, founded in November 1964). Political unity followed in Domisber with an electoral agreement between the PCP and the PGD5 which provided for incomé-hallet mutual withdrawals. It is worth biting at this stage the facility developments which accurred after 1966. In May 1967 the two parties agreed to hold requier meetings, and in June the first of such meetings ended with a communique pledging united tectain an common objectives. In February 1968, a joint PCF - FGDS Declaration asted the assess on work the two sides agreed as well as those on which they disagreed, the latter concerning chiefly foreign policy, national nation, and constitutional revision. In May 1969, the F G DS was dissolved and a new Socialist party was formed to replace the SFIO. It took the name of Parts Socialists (PS) and held two important congresses, one at lasy-les-Moulineaux in July 1969 to adopt a programme and a constitution, and the other at Epiney in June 1971, which committed the party to left unity. The Community were of course desighted and they stepped up their pressure to reach agreement on a common programme. This was duly mened in June 1973, and we shall have more to say about it in the next chapter. What should be mentioned now in that the PCF leadership, as it later admitted, had been so overloved by the rapprochements which were taking piace that it had failed to realise that the PS, especially under Matternand's lendership, was getting closer to the PCF, not only because of 'pressure from below', but also because it thought that left / timity was the best way of achieving a rebalancing of the French left in its favour.

We must now return to 1967 and to the General Election which was held in that year. At the first ballot, the PCF got az 5 per cent of the votes cast (a net gain of one milbon), the FGDS 19.3 per cent, and the PSU 2.3 per cent. (The PSU, or Parts Socialists Unifie, was founded in 1960 by left-wing SFIO militants. It had ratified the December 1966 electoral agreement aigned by the PCF and the FGDS.) The Gaullist continue, which stood under the label of 'Fifth. Republic', not 38.3 per cent, and the centre 15.4 per cent. At the second ballot the great majority of left-ming supporters switched their votes to the left candidate who stood the best chance of heating the right. Such disciplant, which proved that the prospect of Communist. mainsters 'no longer transmatized opinion'. 13 enabled the PCF to man Ut arets and the FGDS 28. The areas in which Communists advanced significantly were industrial centres such as Lorraine (bodly his by unemployment among miners and textile workers), the Seine and Greater Paris region, the north, the Mediterranean muth, the Meurthe-et Moselle area, and the country ade constituencies of Gord, Hérault, and Pyrénées-Orientales. The new assembly included 72 Community, 117 FGDS, 4 PSU, 233 Gouthers and 44 CD (Course) Democrate). The PCF Polithureau expressed its satisfaction at 'the decime of the Genillat party' (at had lost 23 seets) and its confidence that the mated left would 'become the majority in the sear future'

In the industrial field, the PCF supported the innone in their fight for jobs, in France was beginning to face a serious unemployment problem. On 17 May 1967, four unions (CGT, CFDT, FO and FEN)¹³ called for a one-day general strike against the government's 'special powers' and for greater Social Security benefits. They were largely followed. In 1968 working-class malitancy reached such a level that for the first time is many years the government did not but the traditional May Doy demonstration in Paris. At the beginning of the year, the CGT had decided to make May 1966 'the month of youth'. Thus is indeed what it turned out to be, although it happened in a way which exepticed everyone.

"Les événements" (May-June 1966)

'On the May-June movement we do not unfortunately have any thorough studies at our disposal.'15 However, at is possible to gave a brief summery of the events and to examine the main series they ranged for the PCF. It all started with a student revolt (4-13 May); then it developed into a massive social explosion, with workers' strakes and set-me (14-34 May); these led to protracted negatiations and the winning of amportant economic game (25 Mey-15 June); there Was also an appartual political bettle, which de Goulle was in the end. (17 May-10 June). The student revolt, which reached its highest point in May, had in fact begun much earlier in the year, when a number of student leaders were arrested after demonstrations expresmng collidarity with Victoria and demanding changes in French higher education. On 22 March, some three hundred students of the Nesterve faculty in Puris occupied administrative buildings and lecmore bulls, showing 'Release our lailed comradus'. A group calking itself the Measurement du 22 seurs was accessassously creeted, in which a young anarchist, Daniel Cohn-Bendit, was the most vecal furure. It soon not support from other groups, especially ultre-left groups, and from well-known generation such as Jacques Souvegoot, the vice-prendent of the Students' Union (Union Nationals dat Emdanus Francous or UNEF), and Alam Guerner, one of the leaders of the lecturers' unon (Syndscar Nanonal de l'Enseignement Superson or SN Enug). They were all united in their contempt. for the allegedly 'conservative' PCP and CGT and in their organical I to challenge the government by violent action.

On t. May, in the Nanteers is udents refused to vacate the buildings they had up, upped, the police was called in and behaved with unwar. control ferricity, making numerous arrests. The government ducided to close down the Nanterre faculty, and on the following day the whole of the Sorbonne was cloud down and occupied by the police. There were more arrests. On the 5th apppointudents staged a protest demonstration, and as the police had opened fire on them, they retainated by incring paying mones at their maniants. On the 7th students in the provincial universities, sound by a number of junior lecturors, followed the lead of the capital. On that day the PCF encretarist mound a statement condetisated 'police repression', for which the Coulint regime was held responsible, and adding that 'the students dissipt about on, was pieg timate. At the same time the state, ment meeted against the activities of adventured atomosts. This car's propositionisms about a faith good grassman of the party to minute in temperature of the course and a promocial ballion, and other and other and against goal frome, the bitmer being accused of encourage is by Lange, who have a reasonable of the standards. On a May, the CGT intended a UNEF organ sed demonstration, which turned out to be penceful and orderly, much to the chagets of many gour huses. On the maths of 10-11 May there were petched buttles in the Lutin Quarter, especially in the rise Gay Lussic, between the CRS,24 which wird firearms, trancheous and tear-gas, and the students, who defended themselves with paying mones and barricades. It was then that the working class decided to intervene.

The CGT, supported by the CFDT and FEN, called for a general strike on 13 May to protest against police brotality and to explain soludiests with the students. Despute Premier Pompalou a primite to reopetrate factionar and release student leaders, plans for the strike west ahead, and the counts imply fulfilled the organisers' expectations. There were also masseve excest demonstrations in Firm with people chanting, 'Ton yours, that's mough', a alogan which was a reducitive that it was exactly ten years ago that the making putter leading to de Goulle's come-back had taken place. The gauchister instead on Coho-Bonde being at the head of the demonstration. He engerly agreed, and later spoke of his delight at having left 'the binimit scam' boland. Strates and demonstrations also bit many provincial towns. For many organisations, that was the clamas, but the students replied that it was only a beginning, Co n'est qu'un débur, and they looked forward to un imminent revolution. The PCF and the CGT also felt that at measurements to 'continue the straight' the expression much by both of storm—nor-m-order to achieve, or betwee revolution but to obtain improvements for the quotients and the weekers. The PCF added that of lath-man portion could much agreement on an atternative presentation programme, 'the days of personal rule [week] mumbered'.

On 14 May the moreover entered a new stage, as the workers decaded to explore the cross by taking industrial action on their own behalf. The load was group on that day by the workers of Sud-Aventon. (on asseroft factory or Napoes) who accupied their plant and litched upthe bear in his office. The full-wing day the amother Renault factories were also paraissed by strikes and ut one. The CGT insued as appeal, of which it distributed four makes copies, which called for artists at a higher level with the can of competting the employers to haid docornegs and 'great demands which up to now they have stubbernly refuned". The appear aim paked workers to "act without working" and to decide for themselves the methods they waged to use, pindging that the CGT would amost co-ordination. There was no assente call for est one or for a general strike, which the CGT hader, Goorges Sogrey (who was also a Communut), later matified by severa that ex-atstrylors amplied, consecutes, responsible portrespotant 25 and could not be ordered from above. On 16 May at the Renault Bulancourt famous, one of the higgest and most material in Frence, the workers overwhelenanty would for a strate and an our upstoon. From then unstands strikes and at one spread throughout the land, and one can my with Shorter and Tilly that 'the May-June or-down strikes were the largest includestion of workers in French honory', in mystyring from ourse to Nen markon people.

On at May the CGT and the CFDT goes, but sport from under toking to wage a poor fight agreed the programmes a social incurring decrees, they remained deeply devoted. The CFDT wanted to stress demands for the self-management of two-hybrides and maintenance rether than what it called the CGT's 'bread and hurser' demands. The hydres of each organisation bloomed the other for the factors to reach agreement, but as fact both were partly responsible. The CFDT in the degeration to support 'mnorthedem' demands, give the imprevious that it ferogred them cheefly because they had armed outside the CGT and the PCF. The CGT, on the arter hand, anxious to section wage runs and improved conditions, assured now out whosever other arms were raised, fearing that they might distract' the workers from the mean light. Yet there is little doubt that is addition to wage gravenaces, there was also undespread concern over participation in documen-making. Both the CGT and the PCF were plow, not so say relactant, to acknowledge the fact

By the and of May the government, facual with a challenge which was so far unprecedented, felt compelled to take some sort of action. On the 24th de Goulle announced a referendum, whilst Pompidou declared betweek ready to most usual representatives together with the employers. Traperuse talks were held at the managery of Social Affairs, in the run de Grunelle. They were ettended, on the unions' inde, by delegates from the CGT, the CFDT, FO, FEN, the CFTC and the CGC, the hat one beans the union of managerial and percepuory staff, the Confederation Generale des Cadres. Despite the fact that sex unions were present, as their own sequest, it was the CGT which the gouchasses chose to attack for having agreed to negotiate with the 'bourgeous' employers and the 'bourgeous' government. The talks started on 25 May at 3 p.m. and the first sussion lested no less than receive hours. At a nam, on the afth no agreement had been reached on any more except the remons of the national minimum. wage, or SMIG as at was called then, " by §§ per cent. During the break. Pompadou had separate talks with each of the unions. Accordang to Segury he transi to get the CG T's co-operations, first by pointing to de Gaulle's pro-Soviet foreign policy, and then by promising to repeal the discreminatory encoures against the CGT in the workplaces. Still according to Séguy, he humelf replied that the first issue was irrelevant and that on the second one, his union would 'never agree to berter the end of descriptionary measures ... for the workers' demands' 20

The talks finally ended in the early hours of 27 May. The employers had useds unportest concessions, but the union did not commit themselves to unything definite before consulting their members. The first consultation, at Remain Bulancourt, revealed that the workers were in a fighting mood as they voted unanamously in continue the strike it view of the government's refusal to grant more than it had done. The inflating day the fifs T called for manave national demonstrations on sp. May, and was supparted in this by the FCF In Table, should also propped marched through the structs, demanding further concessions as well as de Gamile a gaugestion. In the end, the government and the amployers were forced to hold talks with each branch of industry and to go well over half way in macking the workers' demands. The average wage increases chaged from 12 to 30 per cent, the working week was cur by one hour is some cases and two in others, extra paid holidays were granted, ranging from one to nine days a year; unson rights were extended and guaranteed, and most workers got either full pay or half pay for the strike days. The last rearguard action was fought by the government in the nationalised factories. One car factory, at Flam, was occupied by the police. At the Peugeor plants, the police opened fire on the strikers, kuling one and wounding many others. As all French trains and machines came to a halt in protest for one hour 12 June), the government had to give in and grant many of the demands. The CGT recommended a return to work, whilst the CFDT and FO set on the fence, and its recommendation was endersed by majorities of 70 per cent or over in most, plants, except at Flans, where the figure was 58 per cent only

If the CGT was naturally an the foreignst so the course of the industrial battle, it was the Pt.F steel which waged the political battle. Its first move was made on 17 May, when it offered to meet the F.G.D.S and discuss a common programme which could be presented. to the people as an alternative to Gaulasm. On 18 May, Waideck. Rochet publicly demanded the formation of a popular and democratic government'. The call was repeated in a Politbureau statement of the 20th, which also spelt out what, in the party's view, the situation aesther a patching up of the regime of personal rule demanded * nor an insurrectionary mrike, but . the action up of a ecoupely republican regime, opening up the way to socialism.' The party also appealed to the people, saking them to form 'action committees for a popular government of democratic unity. On the 23rd it once again. demanded a common programme, adding that so far it had approached the FGDS without success. If neither the FGDS nor the PSU was willing to commet study to a joint programme with the PCF. it was because they hoped they could come to nower alone. In their attempt to mointe the Communists they were supported by the CFDT and the gauchistes, in became clear at the 27 May meeting held at the Charlety Stadium. The meeting, organised by the CFDT and the UNEF, and arrended by Mendey-France, was virulently ents-CGT and nots-PCF. Both organisations were described as 'objective ashes of the resume'. On all May, Matterrand held a press conference and forecast that de Gaulle would be defeated in the referendum. He offered to stand as a presidential candidate himself. and he suggested the formation of a provisional inversiment to be headed by Mender-France. There was no mention of a common programme with the PCF, nor had the latter been consulted beforehand, although Matterrand had met the PCF leaders the evening before.

It was at that stage that de Gaulle decided to regam the institutive. He had just returned from a flight visit to Baden-Baden where he had discussed with Massu and other top generals contingency plans for crushing the May revolt by force if necessary, and in his confident mood he decided to address the nation. In his broadcast he gave the lieto those who had thought or asserted that he was about to resign. He withdrew his earlier offer to hold a referendum (on Pompidou's advice, it is believed) and announced instead that he would dissolve Parliament and hold fresh elections. He also blamed the whole of the left, and the PCF in particular, for the terroristic violence of the pauchates. The PCF immediately replied by accepting the challenge. On 1 June its delegates met those of the FGDS, and the two parties reasserted their previous electoral agreement on mutual second-ballot withdrawals. They also extended their February 1968. Common Declaration concerning the social and economic measures. they both advocated. On the 12 June, Waldeck Rochet declared in the course of a TV interview that 'the choice [was] not between Gaullist rule and the introduction of communism into France', hast between 'a sharpened form of personal rule' and a democratic regime in which Communists had a role to play In the same TV speech, he defended his party's resection of 'gauchiste adventurism', saving that it had thus avoided a brood both and, the setting up of a miniary dictatorahap'.

The first ballot was held on 23 June and gave the following results:

		Percentage of
	The same of	potes cast
PCF	4,434,833	20 3
FGDS	3,684,165	16 6
PSU	$65,848	3.0

Centre	2,756,423	9.8
UDR (Gaultists and Independents)	10,281,99$	36.5

The PCF Politbureau did not disguise its disappointment, but claimed that de Gaulle had exploited the fear of civil war. After the second ballot, the composition of the new Assembly was as follows:

	2407
PCF	34 (-39)
FGDS	$7 (−61)
PSU	o (-4)
UDR	149 (+ E16)

Despite the manave challengs to his regime, de Goulle had won again. The PCP complained that this was not due merely to the fear of aparchy, but also to the unformers of the electoral law for example, according to the party, 134,000 votes were needed to return one PCF deputy, whereas a mere 27,000 were enough for a UDR deputy.

David Goldey's assument of the June 1968 electrons deserves attention. His verdict is that 'the French voted measurely for order and a quast life',20 both symbolised by the Goulast party which cleverty explosted the people's fear of marchy. (The easily is significauthy extitled. The parry of fear, the election of Jame 1968) As for the Opposition, it note its four share of blame. The students are charged with having laid a "strategy of polarisation" which had "catastroplac results for their political revolution', and the Communists are accessed of having been 'rejuctant sevelationenes'.19 The authornomes our that the PCF losses ranged from under 4 per cent to about $ per cent and were particularly serious 'to the cost and west, Burgundy and Champagne, and Dordogne, Lot, and Pyreness Orientaies', 24 Finally, he mentions a Para survey taken on 27 May which " showed that public confidence had increased in the trade unions (uncluding the CGT) but had turned assess the students and all the polatical parties (including the Communists)* 31 Such a survey should Move revealed to all, and especially to the PCF, that there is no automatic correlation between industrial anistancy and support for the political left

The first usue raised by May-June 1966 is the movement's social character. Benost Prochos summed up the PCF's view when he described it as 'the greatest class confrontation of the contemporary epoch, the epoch of state monopoly capitalism'. According to the party, the two main classes involved were the workers and the big bourgeouse. The former were said to have given the he to those who had societed that they had become spinetess, for it was their malitancy which had constituted the laggest challenge to Gaulhan, not the students' barricades. Such militancy was backed up by discipline and organisation, and the CGT's 'co-ordinating role' was praised. As for the big bourgeome, the PCF refused to believe, like most others on the left, that it had lost its head. Although it was taken by surprise, it adapted its tactics to a fast-changing situation. At first, it encouraged violent confrontation, then it tried to trap the opposition is to believing that there was a 'power vacuum', and finally, it speculated on fear and launched the electoral battle. When the PCF CC met in July, Waldeck Rochet and 'In effect the calculation of the government was simple, in the face of a crisis which it had itself provoked by its anti-social and anti-democratic policy, it counted on using the crisis to strike a decisive and lasting blow at the working class, at our Parry, and at all democratic movements.'

The PCF also thought that the sharpening of the class struggle had provided the working class with new allies - the students, the interfectuals, and to a lesser extent the middle strata. Because of these comparative manufacture and different backgrounds, these allies, although officially welcomed by the party, were regarded as troublesome and unremable, and the Communist lendership's mixture of courses and aggressiveness in dealing with them, and not only the lendership as unsply widehed the gap instead of narrowing it. With regard to the students, the PCF, as an orthodox Markot purty, in sured that they do not and cannot play an independent rote because they are expects from production, lack happening power, and are a transient social group. On the other hand, the Pauli and soil that mexican students are the natural sition of the working cases because they are threatened with unemp, syment or dead end pins, because of the undemocratic character of higher collection, and because they are exposed to 'bourgame ideology'. Unfortunately these 'natural allies' by passed the workers' mess organisations (CGT and PCF) and mostly feel under the gaschuster' influence. As a result, their claim that they were 'nuti-bourpoors' was bested by their novel interpretation of the terms 'bourgeous' and 'profesarian'. For the ganchistes, the hallmarks of the proletarist were a rejection of routine and convention, a Bohemian style of life, and resort to violence. As for the bourgeon, they included all those who stuck to 'the iraditional methods of strugger', who bothered about public opinion, and who cared about material improvements. The CGT was 'bourness' because a fought for 'bread-and-butter' demands and was willing to negotiate with the employers; the PCF was 'bourgeois' because it resected violence and sought to change the government by legal means; any union leader was a "bourgeous" – and a "burestacrat" to boot – if he wore a collar and tie.

It is difficult to discuss the students without mentioning youth in general, because May-Jone 1968 was also an explosion of youthful exuberance. Young people rated their elders for their alleged 'contervation' and lack of enogmotion. They thought that 'imagination [had] taken power' thanks to their own involvement, a wirry PCP commentator replied that it did not keep it!' and that now was the time to 'be realistic demand the impossible'. Moreover, to them May 1968 was a buge festival, and fits, which gave them a chance to sing, dence, drink and make love. It was a welcome change from the grammens usually associated with politics, but the PCP took it upon itself to warn that the class struggle was also a gram battle. Whilst claiming to appreciate the enthusiasis of vount people, the party feet threatened by it, and its vitrains, attacks on arresponsible leaders', just fied though they may have been, you donly allegate the youth

With regard to the interectuals, the PUF thought that they, too, could not play an independent or leading role because they are remote from production , in Market terms they constitute a stration rather. than a class), but that many 'objective factors' place them on the side of the working class. One is that science is now a direct 'productive force', another as the greater correlation between physical and mental. labour, and a final one is the growth of a 'culture industry'. As us the case of the students and youth, the algance did not take the form which the PCF would have winhed, for the two teachers' unions, FEN and SN Esup, acted independently of the CGT and even of the CFDT. The support given to the students by many lecturers was deemed by the Communists to have been praneworthy, but what was less so in their view was the adoption of generalists faction. These had the effect of driving a wedge between the 'vanguard' and the rest, and according to the PCF, many who would have supported a 'democratse' reform of education were asked to choose between 'bourgeon' and 'socialist' education, the latter being presented as the rejection of tradition and the emphasis on free expression

The oppeal of geniclionia did not leave PCF intellectuals upoffected. Some – probably the impority – reacted by attacking ultra-left theories and by defending the party's policy and Marximi, but others criticised the leadership, especially for its decision not to support a demonstration in protest against the government's decision to deport Cohe-Bendit, who was technically a foreigner since he was of Germany nationality. They were told by Waldeck Rocher that 'such demonstrations, accompanied by barricades and outbreaks of fire samply played into the hands of the Qualiest regime. What Waldeck Rochet did not discuss was whether a PCF presence might have restrained the generalists, our did be disput the behalf that the PCF leaders were socretly planted that Cohn-Benedit had been deported. Such a belief was further strengthened when Marchae described the salten-seft leader as a 'Correspon assorchast' in L'Hamanast', which may have been factually true, but was an unfortunate phrase. 12

With regard to the middle strata, and particularly whose collar workers, the PCF thought they were torn between their desire for a better life and their fear of lawless disorder. It was not good enough, the party asserted, to pool-pools their fears, as the parchister had done, they ought to have been won over to a policy of social progress within the framework of legality. But the PCF itself was not biams-loss, for it did not pay sufficient estimation to their specific interests, and it tended to distant as 'putty bourgoon' their concurs for such source on 'participation' (taken up by both the generators and the Goullets), women's liberation, and the anvironment.

The other important same raised by May-June 1968 was the PCF's role to a. The right-wang charged it with 'mibversion', the non-Community left with 'impotence', and the genelister with 'cowardace". The party study classes at was not quality of any of these faults and that it am itself these same throughout the crisis - first, to savelve the people assume the summe; secondly, to avoid 'adventurate', and finally, to bring down the government by legal ments. It classes to have been exceptiful in respect of the first two same, but - through no fault of us own - not about the third. That it encouraged most action. mustly through the CGT, cannot be desired, but we have already one that at largely aggored source which were not expectly economic and polytical. As for an ability to avert civil war, which according to Weldeck Rochet was "its greatest ment", it is acknowledged by same people outside Communist realis. For example, in La Mais de mas du général, 11 J. R. Tournous refere to de Goulle's Bedon-Bodon trib end adds that the PCP's rejection of a violent upriming might have been due to the fact that at had been secretly informed of the government to plant through looks from termy handquarters. The Calvers do commemorine to replied that the PCF had not had access to any secret plane, but that it had taken quite sersously the threat constituted by the promoter of army units on the siert around and stands Paris.

Another non-Communist, R. Tiersky, thinks that the party was right to declare that the actuation was not revolutionary. To prove their point, the Community used once again the Lemmit argument that a revolution is ripe only when the rulers cannot rule in the old way and when the people no longer mant to be ruled in that way. They pointed to de Guille's control of the 'mate machine' (especially the army and the police) and to the fact that 'the more central concern of the workers was for shop-floor, not natural political matters' 35 Territy comments that 'One does not have to accept the French Communists' position) theory to agree with them that in contemporary France a violent change of regime . is quite unlikely to and that "While some of the state security forces undoubtedly went through a crists of allegiance to the regime in May 1968 unquestionably any attempt by the Community to seize power by violence could not count upon a mass rally to their cause, or even neutrobty' 17

The failure to achieve the third Pf. I min -a change of government by democratic means - was due, as the party said, to the disunity of the self, which the PLP repeatedly tried to overcome. He wever, this does not mean that the Pt.F Ia sed merely because the non-Communist left was uncor perative, At that time, the PCF iself did not have a credible alternative based on a thorough analysis of French realities (Neither had it managed to win over the social sections which are drawn rowards, reformism' tenther of the Goulhat or the annualdemocratic hand, As for its then idea of unity, which involved first, agreement on a common programme 'as the top', it is today strongly criticised by the party smelf /f-mally, the uplit in the international Communist movement which had marted in 1961 16 contributed to the weakening of the PCF's influence and prestige)We shall have to return to these unportant points in the following chapters. Mennwhile, we must briefly look at the party's other weaknesses in May-June 1968 and at the lessons the CC drew from the events.

The first weakness was the PCP's nervousness and defensive attribute when faced with demands it had not initiated or was not used to. This made the charge of Communist 'conservation' appear much more credible. The same fear of novelty made the PCF unnecessarily virulent in attacking the ultra-left. It was ally (because untrue) to lump all the gauchuse 'grouplets' (the groupsiscules in they were contemptuously called) in the same bag to if the differences among them were too trivial to matter. It was equally ally to overlook the potential value for Markots and accurate of such demands as decentralisation and self-management and to hand these over to the ultra-left on a silver plate. (This mistake has now been overcome to such an extent that the PCF's description of the socialism it wants for France is to socialism autogestionnaire.) Finally, although the PCF sensed that all the participants in the May movement (or most of them) were eagerly steking radical solutions, it did not really show the link between the immediate struggle against Gaulliam and the struggle for socialism, except in a very general way. From its point of view, it was of course right to warn that the socialist revolution was not yet on the agenda, but it did not offer a clear, detailed perspective of the steps that could lead to it.

It was mainly in order to remedy this shortcoming that the CC met in December and drew up as Champigny Manufesto, a programme significantly entitled 'For an advanced democracy, for a socialist France'. The novelty of the Manafesto lay in the presentation of 'advanced democracy' as a half-way house on the way to socialism and in the fact that the notion of a 'model' to be copied, the Soviet 'model' of course), which had dominated the purity's thinking for so long, was entirely absent. This last point was not only a response to the May events, but also the first clear sign of the PCF's andependence in resistion to the international Communist movement. As for the concept of 'advanced democracy' itself, although it recalled in some ways Toghattr's ideas on 'democracy of a new type', it had never been formulated by the PCF before. It was neither reformast in the old sense, since the reforms it advocated were surnatural' and intended to 'open up the way to socialism', nor revolutionary in the traditional sense, more it enviroged a left wang conlition, with Communist participation, to lead the country, step by step, on the way to socialum. The social basis of such a contition was 'the broad anti-monopoly. alliance in which the working class plays a leading role'.

CHAPTER 7

'In the colours of France' (1969-78)

A year after its June 1968 electoral aethack, the PCF achieved a remarkable score in the presidential election, which was caused by de Gaulle's resignation as April 1969 after his defeat in a referendum about regional devolution and senate reform. The Socialists having refused a joint left-wing candidate, seventy-two-year-old Jacques Duclos was put up as a PCF candidate, and he conducted his campaign by saying that he wanted to represent 'the union of working-class and democratic forces'. The results of the first ballot (1 June) came as a great surprise to all observers:

Pompidou (Gaultist)	44
Poher (centrust)	23.4
Ducios (PCF)	21.5
Defferre (Socialist)	5.1
Rocard (PSU)	3.7
Krivine (Trouskyist)	1.2

No one, perhaps not even the party itself, had expected a Communist to be third on the list and to get one fifth of the votes cast. As for the Socialist, Defferre, he cut a pretty sorry figure with his paltry 5.2 per cent. For the accord bullot, the PCF advised voters to abstain, claiming that a choice between Pompidou and Poher (who was pro-EEC, pro-NATO, and as 'reactionary' as his rival on home policy) was really a choice between Tweedledom and Tweedledoe, or rather as Duclos put it, between blanc bonnat and bonnat blanc. The fact that nearly nine million people actually abstanced (30.9 per cent) was hailed as a second victory for the purty. With Pompidou as the final winner (57.6 per cent against 42.4 per cent for Poher), the Fafth Republic entered its second phase – that of Gaullian without de Gaulle.

A little over a year after the Champigny Manifesto, the PCF's analysis of French society became more thorough and more detailed, with an important landmark being Marchins's article in L' Hamanuté

(June 1971), significantly entitled 'La sectiof française art an crise'. The Communicat parameters of this crime was - and still at - that at affected all aspects of social lafe - economics, politics, social relations. culture and mornisty. Its root cause was domined to be the mability of 'state memoraly currialism' to find permanent solutions, in that the have of 'changing succesy' was now on the agenda. Such an passioners represented the classes of the party's theoretical work, which had burns in 1966. The startum point of the analysis was the orthodox Margast proposition that the basic contradiction of caratalass, at any stant in its history, is the contradiction between server ownership. and social production. But the party went on to say that today this contradiction is best illustrated by the phinamenous of 'overaccumulation.' On the one head, more and more careful is being accumulated thanks to the modernments of production under the impact of the new technological revolutions, but on the other hand, a arent many factories are been closed down, resulting in the growth of unemployment. The PCF explanation is that the total amount of 'surplus value's produced as not sufficient to broug to the whole of accumulated capatal a sufficient rise to profits, and that as usual under capazinen, the ecronger firms elements the weeker once. The factornes which are closed down are not the most backward, in fact owns the reverse, but they are those which would chain such a share of the total profes that they would force the most powerful authorized and financial groups to be custom with average rather than maximum. profits. In this respect, the state plays a key role and favours the monocoless, especially when it allows public funds, derived from times, to be used extensively. According to Joan Bucles, the med lone of the evenion is that it lends to "its own destruction". But the author ammediately warns against a 'foralistic' approach, stressing first, that distribute develops at a dust reductory fashion - there is progress at well as ducions, modernmetron as well as destruction - and, secondly, that no social everam ever parishes under the etrain of its own inner conflicts, so that it must be destroyed by the clean-cleanes which most waffer from its effects. Hence the great PCF emphasis on the need for working-class struggles and for militancy on the part of all social sections, hence sho the said for the Community mery to 'roise the livel of people's consciousness' by showing them that their fight is incremery - in order to stop the tendency of the system to destroy more productive forces, material and human - and that it can succeed stace capitalism is unable to overcome the cross it has itself created.

To last all the struggles authored or supported by the PCF in the terrenties would require a whole book. It is enough to mention two of their chief characteristics. One is the wide range of source – for wage and penacia rises, against curtailment of 55 benefits, for improved working conditions, against curtailment of 55 benefits, for improved working conditions, against closures and redundancies, against inflation and high prices, for better occasi services (education and health included), for better housing and lower reach, and finally for an excession of democratic freedoms. The other characteristic is the PCF view that each of those struggles, although limited to specific objectives, was bound to be a challenge to the regime. For example, Marchais sold the 21st PCF congress that when workers fight to keep their factories running, they are not merely fighting for jobs, but that they also ' . . . dony that the law of unanimum profit for big business should dictate the government's economic decisions, they put forward solutions which imply the curbing of the monopoliss.

The three mean events in the decade under review are the Common Programme (agned in 1971), the 23nd congress (held in 1976), and the breakdown of the left summat (September 1977), followed by the left's General Election defeat in Morch 1978.

The Common Programme (1969-24):

The signing of the Common Programme in June 1971 was preceded by a three-year bettle during which tough perotutions took place between the two mass partners, the PCF and the PS. In addition, each party was trying to put its own house in order. For the PCF, the process included the holding of its 19th congress in February 1970. and the adoption of a programme for 'changing course' (Changer de cas) in October 1971. The 19th congrues was pagesting pointedly and proposestimabily. Polytically, it remerted the party's commences. to 'advanced democracy' as a transmissingletage towards socialists, and it rejected the views of Roger Germidy. Garandy's disagreements with the leadership went back to 1960 and concerned four moses. First, he wanted the party to drop Marsison on its 'official philosophy' (to which the leadership supposed that it was 'a guide to action' and not an 'official philosophy'), secondly, he clasmed that the scientific and technological revolution had led to the formation of a new 'historical bloc', in which 'organised intelligence is in the process of becoming the main productive force' (to which the leadership replied that this was averstressing technological changes at the expense of social reletions and the class struggle and amounted to destroying the party's working-closs character), thereby, or his 'Prench model of osciolism', there was no count for peruspents with other political parties (because they find all become obsolute apart from the PCF) or for an alliance between workers and antellectuals (because both were part of the same "hassarical bloc! (to which the leadership replied that the whole analysis rested on false, unproven pressures); finally, he wanted the party's organisation to be 'plantist', with various trends on-existing and continues to arese for their views after majority decisions have been taken (to Which the leadership replied that this was introducing 'factions', much as Garoudy had protested that this was not les insention). In addition to these process differences, critical incrical differences included Germaty's class that the PCF had mishendled the situation in May 1960, ensucially with regard to students and artellectumb, and that it had not more for encuels in condemnant the USSR after the makeny intervention in Carchodovskia 3 Geraudy was criticated at the 19th congress, eithough he was allowed to speak, and was expelled in April 1970. In June, together with Tillon and two other dissidents, he attacked the leadership of the PCF in on 'Appeal' to all purty members. (Takes was not formally expelled, but he hannelf released to take up a party card in July 1970, after his breach had recommended his expulsion but before the CC had had a chance to resify or resect the recommendation.) The organisational importance of the 19th congrew was the removal of Garaudy from the leadership and the election. of Marchau to the post of Assument General Secretary, in the absonce of Waldeck Rochet who was acrought all, (He never recovered and died in February 1983.)

The adoption of Changer de cap was meant as a contribution to the tolks on a common programme with the Socialists, and one million capito of the document were acid within a few weeks. It included a number of socia-economic measures to improve working people's lives, proposals for 'democrationg' France's pointed system, profound structural reforms such as nationalisation of the monopolars and the man industrial firms, proposals for economic expansion and facial reforms, and a foreign policy programme based on disarranment, proceful co-existence and interpolational co-operation. The final stetics declared that only a government of 'popular union' could achieve these associated that the programme processed by the PCF was not a take-st-or-leave-st pockage deal but a basis for discussion among the left. In March 1972 the PS replied with its own programme, Changer is our. Unlike the Cammingst programme, it did not opinly refer to a poverament of 'popular masse', but and that Socialists would govern

'with the support of a left majority' without spinifying the form that 'uspport' would take. On none-economic sames, the programme mivinged nationalisations and even 'collective appropriation', but the amplians was on self-mapagement (l'autogration). Finally, the Socialist remades against inflation stemmed from the theory that higher prices were due to lock of competition and thus involved government measures to encourage competition to a means of compelhad firms to reduce their prices.

Considering the great differences between the PCF and the PS programmes the compromise reached in 1972 was all the more remarkable. The public announcement that agreement on a Common Government Programme had been reached was made by Marchan and Mutterrand at 5 a.m. on 27 June. It was the first time in France that left usury had been achieved on the basis of a comprehensive programme whose fundamental sun was to make inreads into the power of big business, or to use the words of the 1974 Labour Party manufesto in this country, to bring about 'a decisive shaft in the balance of wealth and power in favour of working people and theat families'. The Common Programme (which was shortly afterwards endocaed by the disadent left Radicals known as the Mostement des-Radicaux de Gauche, or MRG) began with a presentite which said that the PCF and the PS wasted to keep their 'reparate identity' but that this did not 'jeopardise their will and their ability to govern together' Four sections followed. The first one, 'Social policies', pledged that a left povernment would rame wages and amprove social services. The second section, 'Economic policies', included (after bard-hitting discussions) the pledge that as soon as a left government took power, the country would cross 's maximum threshold of narionalizations. These affected nane key industrial groups, commercial and investment banks, and large mourance companies. The third section. 'Political evitors', was also the result of a compromise, and included the curtailment of the Prendent's powers, proportional representation, the promise to reagn if the government lost the assembly's or the people's confidence, and the opposition parties! right to exact, provided they respected the law. The fourth encuous, "Foreign Affairs", was a further compromise, and it included France's retention of EEC membership together with the promise that shit would try to free the EEC from the domination of big business, acceptance of a European defence agreement together with the piedge that the French government would work for dearmament and the endof mulitary blocs, and international co-operation.

Although the measure of the Common Programme was a great Victory for left unsry, it soon became apparent that the two parties had been actuated by very different motives. The PS had aigned the programme in order to weaken its Communist rival, the PCF had mened it in order, to Marches put it to the C.C., to create 'the most favourable conditions for setting the massus in motion around our ideas, our solutions, our name', that, however, did not involve weakening the PS, if only because at that stage, it certainly did not require any further weakening. The Socialist strategy, especially Matterrand's, savolved reducing the PCF to the role of suppor portner and then only to include it in a left continion the better to control it and contain it. This strutery, ennounced by Mitterrand in 1969, became clear for all to see in 1981, when the PCF was included in the government, not so much in spate of its electoral setback but because of at In his 1969 book, Ma part de versté, Matterrand put the matter as follows.

the ngity of the left requires [stasse per] the Communist party. But the tenty of the left — to far from being a sufficient condition. Socialist democracy, in order to be able to exert its leadership [the English word it tend) within the new majority, must extend its appeal on its left (by the rigide of its accounte programme, and on its right by its political liberalism). Hence the importance I attach to the formation of a political movement which can, first counterpowe the Communist party, then dominate it, and finally decime by itself, in study, a majority vocation [and tocation majority].

A day after sagging the Common Programme, he told a meeting of the Socialist International in Vienna. 'Our fundamental objective in to build now a great Socialist party on the ground which is occupied by the Communist party stielf, in order to prove that out of the 5 million Communist voters, 3 million can vote Socialist. This is the reason for the agreement [on the Common Programme] ⁴⁵

The PCF leadership's assessment of the Common Programme was given by Marcham, first at a CC meeting held on 29 June, and then at the 20th party congress in Doomsbur 1972. In his CC report' he said that for Communists the Common Programme should lead to a powerful man accessment with the sam of building a new democracy, opening up the way to accessor. With regard to the pledge of resignation after an electoral defeat, he claimed it was not a grudging concession on the PCPs part, because it corresponded to what the party had stressed 'in the recent period'. Whatst welcoming the PS's firm computament to left unity, he wanted that 'it would be dangerous to have the distinct dismon about the Socialist party's inscirity . . . on this mitter and that the best guarages was 'more visibates and more presence to ensure levelry to the Common Programme'. After mentransport the most important concurrence made by both index, including the Constituted one of agreeing to France's retention of incircal merlear weapons, he concluded by saying that the agreement did not represent an 'absolupced synthesis' between the PCF and the PS. You at furtions the ideology which guides the Socialist party today in and remains wholly reformist. Marchair's report was an honest account of the true position, as it included both the achievements and the problems, but it was unfortunesely silent on the novelty of the party's stand on a sumber of seess, especially the Communists' pledge to respect the people's electoral vardict. It was all very well for hats to say that it was in keeping with the party's pronouncements 'in the recent period', but first, it was a very recent period indeed, and secondly, it did constitute a radical break with the past. In the past, Community had really evaded the fame of alternation by seving it would not arise under secusion made people who make a precision. never put the clock back. What was new was, first, the party's constitutions to a transformal state, 'edvagoed democracy', in which the asses was bound to arme, and secondly, the Laurenment commetment to praceful revolution, under water the sectional contests and not of their opponents takes the form of electoral contests and not of their opponents takes the form of electoral contests and not of tioned these points, he would have provided his own members with much seeded arguments to sustify the new approach, to unever queries, and possibly to alonce housie critics.

At the 20th party congress Marchase's opening speech was mostly a detailed commentary on the Common Programme. What was especially agashoust was that Marchase hymnid was stacted to the post of General Secretary, as Waldeck Rochet's almost was to serious that he was incapable of any 'physical and satellactual work', and that in his new capacity, he fought for the implementation of the Common Programme with greater vigour Equally againforms was the presence of PS and MRG delegates, both of whom classed they were not impressed by the government's auto-Communist attacks. A final importance of the congress was that it reported a membership increase and a strengthening of the party in the factories.

The signing of the Common Programme had two interesting electoral sequels. The first one was the March 1973 General Election. At the first ballot, the PCF and its pariners presented separate condidates, but the PS and the MRG fought under the joint label of Union da la Gauche Socialiste et Democrate (UGSD). The results were as follows:

	96
PCF	21 3
UGSD, PS	18.9
MRG	1.5
PSU and generalistes	3.3
Other left	13
Government coalition URP)	34 5

The PCF gained 700,000 votes by comparison with 1968 and about a hundred thousand by comparison with 1967. However, its percentage was 1-2 per cent lower than in 1967. The PS vote, on the other hand, had gone up considerably, so that it was the Socialists rather than the Communists who had gained most from the Communists rather than the Communists who had gained most from the Communist. Programme. The regional results confirmed the national trend: the PCF vote was up in three regions, stationary in six, and down in thirteen, the PS vote was up in thirteen regions, stationary in time, and down in seven. The second ballot brought practically no surprises, but although the united left was shead in terms of votes (43.2 per cent as against 42.9 per cent for the government condition), the URP retained a handsome majority of seats, having been helped by the distribution of electoral boundaries in the country. Left discipline was good, both among the candidates and the voters. The new assembly had 73 Communists, text UGDS, 1-PSU, 268-URP and 12 Independents.

As the unity of the left had benefited the Socialists more than the Community, Marchaus dealt extensively with their fact in his CC report after the electrons. After saying that the leadership had expected the PS to achieve a more spectacular advance than the PCF, be gave four reasons for it. One was that PCF members had not had time to publicise the Common Programme and their party's role in it; a second one was the government a crude anti-Communist propagands (a return to 'Fanticommunisme de papa'); a third was that the PS had indulged in some anti-PCF untics strelf, and a final one was that the PS's new image had helped it to appear as a more reasole.

force for change that the PCF

About a year ofter the elections, a greeidoutal election had to be held because of Pomendou's midden death. On the meht, the mass challenger was Guenre d'Estaing, who had been Fanance Munister in previous governments, and who pledged 'change within continuity', the former being expressed by a liberal arounde towards the middle choose and the intellectuals, the latter being ensured by relecting the economic and political alternatives proposed by the Common Progrussess of the left. On the left, Matterrand was chosen as the smale candidate. It is worth notice that the main issues of the electoral compagn - social measures, nationalisation, democracy, foreign policy, and the possibility of PCF government perticipation - west those the Common Programme had reseed. The suspect of the progremane can be measured by the fact that in 1973 about ten million people had voted for it (in voting left), whereas in 2974 eleven million. people round for the Common Progressors condudate in the first round, and nearly thereen melhon in the second cound, the last figure representing about half the total. Mittermed's support came from 70 per cept of the undostrol workers, 40 per cout of the whate coller Workers, 40 per cent of the persons, and the mesority of young people, however fewer women voted for him than for Gucard, 48 percent and 52 per cent respectively. By companion with 1973, he improved the left-want vote in about fifty departments and in a number of large and medaun-used towns, but in some tharty departements the percentage was lower. These variations are not easy to explain in the abusines of a thorough analysis, but one reason may be the difference between a prendential election and a parliamentary election. At the second bullet Matterrand picked up about two million. votes and was defeated by Gueard by a very narrow marsia, at it per cent and so.8 per cent respectively. Understandably, the PCF leadership regarded the results as a 'remarkable victory' for the Common Programme and for my own policies. Many non-Community commenintorn agreed that, in a sense. Matterrand rather than Gueard had been the real victor and that this was partly due to the PC.P's wholehoursed eupport.

The PCF leadership did not rest consent with hailing Microrrand's near victory, it also tried to maives the remons which had prevented it from being a complete victory. Marchau first tackled the near in his June 1974 CC speech and said that what was missing was the import of many people who trackinosally vote for the right. These, he americal, could be won over by showing them that the Common Programme, although drawn up by the left, was as the apterests of the overwhelming majority, and he added that it was 'a question not only of breaking through the 50 per cent barrier needed for an electoral victory', but of creating 'a situation which will enable the democratic changes to be carried through under good conditions. A few months later in October, the PCF held an extraordinary congress, the 21st, to discuss the new stage of the ownesse after the prendential ejection. and in his opening report, Marchan doclared. France cannot be divided into two haires whose interests are diametrically opposed I be declared dividing line is between on the one hand, the great mass of the French people who live by their work and serve the country, # and on the other hand, the tarrow caste which owns and dominates the economy and the state ' It was therefore necessary to extend left unity and build a Union of the French people' reminiscent of the 'French Front' proposed in 1936). Such a union should first be based on a class basis; the working class, the white collar workers, the middle strata, the intelligentials, the peasants, and even small and medium capitalists, all had a common enemy - monopoly capital. Marchais claimed that 'the extension of exploitation by Big Business to all social groups apert from a handful of lords of industry and finance' was the 'objective hous' of the policy proposed. Secondly, the Union of the French People was means to include the great 'ideologiral families' of France, the Marxista, the Christians, the republican humanists, and even the Gauliuts because their concern for independence set them against Gincard a "Atlantic policy". The altiance should also include women and young people. The only people who were deliberately excluded, and indeed against whom the altrance was samed, were the too layers of capitalist society, the modern 'two bundred families' who, in the PUF's view, had grown smaller in numbers but stronger in wealth and power. The party stressed that their exclusion meant that there was no question of a return to the union sacrie, which rested on 'class collaboration, and not on the class BLFURRIE.

In his report, Marchan also dealt with PCF-PS relations, which had begun to deteriorate. He complianed that the PS's 'project for a socialist society' had made it forget the less ambitious but much more singest Common Programme. He also referred to the Socialists' ambition of rebalancing the left. After saying that the PCF, too, wanted to become stronger, he claimed that competition should take piace methos the left allower and out with the sam of weakening one partner in that the other's will can be imposed on it. Such a palicy, he und, 'can lead another partner to victory.' Finally, Marchan spake about the relationship between the Common Programme and occasiom, mying that one did not 'entomatically' lead to the other. A hard struggle was tall necessary to was over the importly of the Petitich people to the ideas of occasiom. 'When the time course,' he concluded, 'it will be for the people of our country..... to discide. As strongly extent, we shall respect its virilicit.' The details of the Proach tend to inclaim, torontom in the colours of France', so the party is found of exting it (by imag Aragon's competit his 1945 poom, which insurted. More part) into reach for conference de la Prance', which population there are those of the lastices and congress.

The and oragrees (1976).

The atent consists was held in February 1976 and represented to turning point. In as great an congruence can be used to be building to uta party's factory, one can amert that the PCP was burn at its foundathen congress in 1920, that it began to grow up at its eighth congress its 1916, and that it came of our at its 220d congress in 1976. The shoft movetty of this had congress was that it commutted French Communimix to an examine democratic road to tocustom. The phrase surplies the withmeness to one enurging democratic forms, e.g. Parliament, and to amand charges their upper where, so democratic possess range dis hops, It also assumes that the excellent revolution in Preservett-to-o perceful one, excluding givel was Such a perspective, which was epresent as a possibility as a small autility of cases by Mary, Angele and Lance, has become reasons today because according to PCF. commentators, the balance of forces has changed mornationally and agreemelty, the querry has become weaker become 'steportalism' in chatteneed by the receipt constron and the astronal liberation. movement in former colonies and also bucome the sectal base of managedy capitalnes is considerably acresses. The mass ingredisease of the new Pt. F creategy are ste independence in referent to any existing 'model', in rejection of 'the dicrottership of the prolitorat', and an economic post to 'plansions. Let us besuffy execute a such of these pound.

The first one was not structly new in principle, since it had been continuely suggested by Theres in his 1946 Femal interview, but it was the first type that the party was going beyond the assertion that personal conditions should be "taken into account" and was actually being the whole of its approach and policy on them. Marmour, for the first time ever at a PCF congress, strong criticisms were voiced of some aspects of life in the Soviet Usion, and these concerned precisely the "lamitations on democracy" which married the country's other achievements and gave a described mage of specialism. Panally, whilst recognising the existence of "universal laws" of nonelism, the congress second that no two members were able and that a socialist France would not be a mechanical copy of other nations' experience. With its said congress, the PCF had decisively opted for its own version of "Euro-constitution".

It was in the course of a TV interview, during the pre-congress discussion period, that Marchais first suggested that 'the dictatorship of the professions' should no longer be one of the PCF's none. A manber of critics complemed that the membership should have been consulted beforehand, but whetever magaziness there may have been concerning that aspect of the matter, the procosal itself was widely and hothy debated throughout the party before it was finally endorsed. by the 22nd congress. Marchan told the delegates that it was pustified on two arounds, first bucause the word 'dictatorship in new manciated with feacien, and secondly because other social sections, and not just the proletarist, are now in fewers of socialism. The first of Marchana's pounts was not past semantic. Apart from the fact that the word 'dictatorship' had accounted auti-democratic connectations never untended by Mark,* at also receiled the 'groe hand' used as Russia. during the civil war. With the peaceful read proposed by the PCF, coercion takes on a different aspect. It is still accessary to 'coerce' open from, but by law, not by force. Unlike the Botsheviks, who had only Tearns laws at their discoonl when they took power, the European revolutionaries who choose 'the democratic road' will be able to use the 'progressive' legislation introduced under transitional regimes meh as 'advanced democracy'

The second point was many graced much it reflected a deep hatercomes assumed change, the fact that other classes apart from the proletarist have been son over to the ideas of socialism before the appointion. When Lenas argued that only one class should take power and then use it to get the support of the rest of the people, he did so because he believed that in Russia, for example, the passions had been because he betteved that in Russia, for example, the passions had been because he expect them to accept sucasion and that it was therefore utopsin to expect them to accept sucasion before they could see it work. Today, however, the prospect of a majority of the pupple demanding occulist solutions is no looser an silumos, and the PCP concluded that the acceptat state which is likely to prize in France will be, from the mart, the state of the working class and its alless rather thus the state of the projetaries alone. It is such a perspective which the porty wanted to stress by discarding 'the dictatorship of the proteurser. However, so the sun had been a long-standing one, the unenamous documen to give it up at the congress may be maileading. Resistance to the idea was strong for enample, according to L'Humanusé (27 Innuary 1976), at the Garonde district congress the discussion on this more listed fourteen hours and ended with two delegates voting against the leadership, twelve abstaining, and some emong the 3.24 who voted in favour prohibity during to out of disciplings rether than conviction. Prominent party intellectuals, such as Althuseer, expressed their complete demonstrations, others, such as Seve. Visorously defended the decision, 10

The commitment to 'plurshess' was another striking acvelty. The word 'phuraham' has three meanings for Communists - the rejection of the one-party system of government, the toleration of a legal opposition under socialism, and the co-existence of different ideologies. The first papers is common to ment Communist parties of when post-States are and envisages that socialism can be built by a condition of parties rather than by a ungle out. The second aspect is more controvernal and at generally accepted by Euro-communist parties only. The case for it made at the PCF axad congress was that pluralum is implied in the peaceful road to socialism, as the latter toyolves methods of persoance and education in dealers with distidepts rather than the destruction of polistical opposition by force or by administrative means. Against the sobotage of former rulers, the PCF thought that the 'excellet law', 'the puople's vigilisor' and the wankening of the economic basis of capitalism would be sufficient. informerds. Moreover, socialist pluralism according to French Comgrunner, stems from the confidence that in a fair contest between toguleur and its critics, nociolaus is sure to win, and from the realisation that merely to ourlew hostile parties is the surest way of creating. mortyre, as Engels pointed out when he condemond the abolition of relation by 'state decree'. Family, the PCF argument is that criticism. is a valuable check on the action of any appearament. An important consequence of the PCF's commitment to pluralism was that the 22 and conserves resourced that Communicate would respect the people's verder 'in all carcumstances' and that they 'componently rule out all reach to oppression, totalizarianam, and personal power'. This new language met with name opposition stands the party, as some people expressed the four that pluralisms would 'legalise counter-revolution', and with aceptacism on the part of some autuale cruics who suggested that the record of Contaminants in power was hardly pluralistic.

With regard to ideological pluritism, the 22nd congress resolution and that the PCP was in favour of 'the free expression of many treads of thought, within the respect for the spiritual families which reflect the bastery of our people'. The idea that France should have an official philosophy under socialism – Marxion – was rejected. An arricle in the Galassia disconsistance ourseled that this would be against the very spirit of Marxion, which as a science, does not need to impose' their institutionally, and an a doctrine based on discourse, restors that ideological debates reflect contradictions in the real world and that their suppression would spell the end of intellectual progress. The article also suggested that the high quality of the contributions under by Markista in some stocalar countries 'ower shouldtely nothing to the "official" status given to Markista'.

Other secresting aspects of the 22nd congress were the party's proclamed 'respect for diversity' and its defence of moral values. According to the PCF, the working class is made up of all those who produce 'surplus value' by their magnel or mental labour and it should not tone at duranctive electity in the no-called front do classe. which the PS talks about and which is 'a single class' eather than 'on tiliance between the working class and the middle strata! 11 When the Community sak other social groups to more with the working class. they do not sak them to become workers but to been their own parametry and to just the bread popular allunce 'so they are'. For example. Marchan asserted that the PCF's appeal to manageral and supervisors stuff, the codes, is in follows. 'We do not tall the codes: Bacome workers, behave like them, leve like them. No, we tell them. you are codes, and that is good you can rely on us to ensure that you find your place alongside the working class just as you are

The popular union needs you and you good it " With regard to moral values, the congress resolution had a paragraph excited We trent irretherhood, which used that the end of explostation 'will help the whole of society to rise to a higher moral level and will encourage the emergence of new moral values'. But the text of the resolution cannot give an idea of the sharp inner-party debases which took place on this same. At the Monelle district congrues, the section on morality was rejected by 101 votes to 79, with 14 obstantions. Four was expressed that Communists had become upholders of conventional, 'bourgeon morality'. Outside the party, right-wing and theral critics complianed that the PCF was being either hypocritical or arrogant in charging others, the 'bourgeon', with moral shortcomings. At the congress, Jean Kanapu replied to both left and right criticism. He claimed that the PCF, because it was the party of the working class, was '... the party which respects human personality, the party of framess, of pastice, of brotherhood, of generously, of decease? Rejecting the view that there were 'bourgeois values', he went on to say that the modern bourgeoisse had no time for morality, and he concluded. 'Yes, the working class reconcurres that ar well from the bourgeoisse.'

One criticism that may be levelled at the 23nd congress is that it hardly continued self-critical analysis of the purty's post, except by implication. There was no overt reference to Communicate' former errors, above all no analysis of why they had armon. This was particularly regretable whose the same puople were heard asympthe opposite to what they had been orying a few years back. Whether self-critical discussions took place in the districts and in the cells we have no way of telling, but they were certainly conspicuous by their absence at the congress itself. However, despite this weakness, the 23nd congress was the steat vivid illustration that the PCF had changed. According to Foreset, at had changed 'it least as much as in the thirties, probably more than during the Reinstance'. 12

Two ospects of the change deserve a brief mention. One is the party's internal life, the other is structfude towards intellectuels. A noticeable feature of the former is that anner-party democracy, always recognised in theory, had been extended in practice, with the leader-shap frequently having to defend its views incread of impoung them. Joan Eilesawein, in a book he wrote before the became a disordent, reported that a woman journabilit who joined various political parties in order to test them from the made was surprised to discover that the name members of her PCF cell freely used what they had on their manch. She also realised that the had usede a matrice in diseasing 'protections' clothes because the other female 'committee in diseasing 'protections' clothes because the other female 'committee in diseasing 'protections' clothes because the other female 'committee in these their feature to the published by 'bourgeon' if the without meaning the leader-thap's wrath, although it felt at times that in sutborstative 'refutation' was called for. There have been no major expulsions make 1970, and $_{aff,a}$ Marcham even classed that 'the time of expulsions is over'. After 1978 thus laboral character was sluthtly modified, and we shall see in the last chapter that a few antellactuals were in fact expelled, or rather, to mathe official emphession, that the CC registered that 'they (had) put themselves outside the party' 14 The membership growth has been consistent throughout the years, reaching over half a quillion members in 1476. The number of factory cells, which went up from 1,680 in 1973 to over eacht thousand in 1976, testafies to the party's solid worksne-cless implantation

'The party of the axad congress', as it now likes to call meet, could also been of a record number of intellectuals inside its ranks. Whereas in the 1620s 'workerson' made for tense relations with the intellectuals, and whereas as the Popular Front and liberation periods, estellectrade period the corty streetly as undividuals and as order 'to mily the working class', the letest trend has been one of a mass influx of intellectuals. On the one hand, they themselves maded not said to held the workers but to defend their own interests, and on the other hand. the rest of the party and the leadership in particular showed a greater understanding and flexibility towards them. In June 1977 Marches asserted. 'We need you precisely because you are intellectuals. . In return, it is the duty of insellectuals to understand. . . that there is no sotution for them. . . . outside an alliance with the working class." In 1974 two non-Lummanut journalists made what they called a hourney soude the Community Party', i.e. they sourcewed a large number of leaders and ordinary members. All the intellectuals they spoke to confirmed that they felt they were "first-class estatens" saude the party and not outsiders who had to be tolerated. Francis Cohen added that Boday it is in relation to his own activity as an insellectual that the Intellectual contributes to the party' 15 All this does not mean that the period was free from conflicts between intellectuals and the narry. For from it. The leadership's stress on 'the poor' and its alleged tactical comerciality were a cource of frequent criticism on the part of intellectuals.

Whiles the PCF was busy putting at own house in order and getting a new image, political side in France had not stood stall. At first it looked as if the usary of the left, achieved by the againg of the Contains Programme, was going to be particled by a comparable unity on the right. For, after winning the 1974 presidential election, Giocard, not hamself a Gauthat, had appointed the Gauthat leader, Jac-date Chirac, in his Printer Montator. But an both using the monthmen of unity was materialist. Just as the P5 and the PC2 men drafted apart. a roll usup appeared between the Concurdants and the Continue. It come to a bood when Charac resigned in August 1976, and shortly afterwards breadened the Goulius purry and renemed it RPR, or Recomblement pour la Republique. He tried to combtae the old Contline represent with non-left opposition to the manufactor pulicing of Concret and his new Prime Manager, Revenand Diego. The sam of the so-called plan Barry was to combat inflating by reducing the theory supply and by cutting expenditury and horousing, both public and previous. Whatever one magic think of the mores of monetorium, it det not exceed in curtain inflation, nor did it manage to prevent manifestoyment from coming by 50 per cent in these years. Marcover, as the plan concentrated on these advetres which were considered "Protabler", i.e. there which paid their tray and made high profits), it had to widosprend classics. Googred and Burry argued that external factors were to blame, and they advocated the meagration of the Prench econogy within a west Burupum economy, closely linked to the USA. Hence a foreign policy which involved a represchaming with both the E.E.C and the U.S.A., and was thus a transform depurture from de Gaulle's acureach.

Chartic a rivigination had in more party alignments. In order to these RFR's challenge, Guicard's Parcs Republicants (the new name taken by the Independent Republicans in 1977) decided to morpe with Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber's Radical party control quite important from the Laft Radicals or MRG)* and with Jean-Leconnet's CDS, and thus form a broad concre-right condition, the UDF, or Union pour to Districtions Principals. Although the Guillian were alightly about of their rivide in the 1974 and 1981 General Electrons, the UDF distances between the RPR in the 1979 European electrons, and in 1981, it was Guicard d'Instance, not Charac, who focus Matternated at the second bullet of the providential electrons. His definit weakened the UDF, of covere, but a rebalancing of the right at the Gaulhete's exposes contest be risked out.

Dooth of the Common Programme (1977-8)

In March 1977 the PCF proposed page mortings to the PS and the MRG in order to 'update the Contains Programme' in the light of the changes which had occurred between 1979 and 1977, especially the growth of unemployment from half a million in 1973 to one and a half unalison in 1977), the hasher cost of living. Guard's 'austeries policy', and 'the increased subordinating of French foreign pulsey to that of the USA and the FRG'. The party also clusted that the approach of a General Election made at urgent to 'undate' the 1972 programme and to make a comprehensive but of the firms to be nationalised. On 17 May a meeting of the three parties took place at which Materrand stated that the whole thing could be not over in one hour as a merely envolved alterning a few figures here and there. PCF delegates unusted that much more than this was at stake, and, reluctantly. Mattersand agreed that a working group of fifteen people (five from each party). should be ust up. On 16 June, Matterrand told the PS congress that has party should achieve a 'dominant constion' within the left and that Socialists had better theses to do thus spend a lot of time on the revision of an already agreed Common Programme, for their first duty Win to complete their own specific programme. At the end of July the three-party working group reported on the seven which had been astrond upon and on those which stall remained at obeyance, and it was decaded that a summit conference should be held on 14 September.

The delegations of the three left parties, headed by their respective leaders, duly met on that day. On the PCF's behalf, Marchant expressed the hope that agreement would be reached, and he demed that the Community wanted 's second Common Programme' or were trying 'to replace the Common Programme with a Community progrimme'. Holf way through the talks, the MRG leader, Robert Fabre, walked out of the meeting and publicly accound the PCP of 'everbuilding to purtners. The Socialist mience could be interpreted - and was so interpreted by the PCP - as condoming the charge, but Marchais denied at and wrote in L'Humanete that the Communist proposals were based on 'the exacting needs of our people and our country' He also used the Left Reducals to return to the conference table, which they agreed to do on the 21st. The summed talks don't with the most important bose of contesting between the two sides ~ motionalisation. The Communists insured that in openium of nine industrial groups, the Common Programme had mount both the perent companies and the subsidiary firms they controlled (lesfrieder), but the PS and the MRG demod that. As a concennon, Marchau approunced that the PCF had reduced at list from an itetaal 1,000 to 729 Abales to be nationabled, classical that this figure represented on absolute minimum. The PS, for its part, was not prepared to go any higher than 200. What was also at etake was the nature of nationalization. The PS view was that it amounted to the solvener of the financial holdings of the firms concerned, whereas the PCF wagted the eventual of exercing owners and their replacement with what it called a system of 'democratic quarted'. The split was short-open rather than tectical. For manyle, Machel Record – who had become our of the PS's chief occasions capacits – and that control mattered more than ownership, but for the Market PCF, one was impossible without the other.

Other contentions serves included the SMIC and were then in general, increases, and defence policy. On the first one, the PS eventually agreed to a SMIC encroser in the light of 1977 regions,' as proposed by the PCF, but would not consent study to further revitions in 1978. On the second using the P5 resected the PCFs proposed capital sat and wealth say, as well as the Communist succesthen that encome differentiate should be at the radio of five to our. In a pre-cummer breadcast, Matterrand had used that such a ratio did not even cases at the Sevent Users, but the PCP channel to be 'enterended' that a firench Socialist about these his organization what was his possma in the USSR On defence, the PS fevoused a Barapage sucless. strike force, but the PCF wanted a left government to retent the French quelour force. There was come group in the saturation, first because Absterrand had been a member of the cost neverament which had equipped France with nuclear weapons, and secondly because until 1977 the PCF had been a stern critic of the move. The party's new stand cannot a good deal of suspense, not hard tenong PCF members, who were found with a fast accountly. The inaduration argued that the attention had changed and that there was no take to consult the membership, but it is hard to see why an emergency distrate could not have been arranged. By that as it may, the regerge for the PC F's several attitude were group by June Kanapa what he told the C.C. that conventional armamouts had such to such a low level that they were no longer adoption for defence. He added: "We did not want France to couse herself with auctor weapons country dail not already possess them, we would curtainly not propose equipping it with them today."

On as Suprambus is became alone that an agreement could be expected between the PCP and its partners, and the left unusual was adjourned true due. Each sade meteorally blassed the other for the breakdown and enhancements against a left of true arguing about burgarnessisty. Technology, both were respectable—the PS and the

MRG because they hardly made any concessions, the PCF because it clung to a 'manimum' beyond which it openly said it would not so What was more important, however, was not so much the behaviour of each detegation at the tasks but the deep political motives behind it According to the PS - and to quite a few non-Communit commenttators - the PCF no longer wanted left unity because it had streng. " thened the Socialists at the Community' expense. That, in the PS's view, was the main factor, but in addition the PCF was charged with a 'dogmatic' attachment to 'collectivism', which prevented it from seeing that a mased economy' was the only realistic solution. It was also accused of resorting to demanous; promises' in order to regain its influence, and finally of being at best lukewarm towards a left electoral rectory because the Soviet Coson favoured the restor gue in western Europe. The PCF rejected all these charges and clasmed that the 'reformat' P5 had swume to the right because it felt strong enough to do without the Communists and because it had yielded to the double pressure of the French bourgeouse - always eager to drive a wedge between the two working-class parties - and of the Socialist International - which was equally against to drive a wedge between Mitterrand and Marchais, just as it had done between Source and Cunhal in Portugal. Moreover, the PCF did not deny that it was disturbed by the PS's growth, but it claimed that past experience had shown that a strong Societist purty and a weaker Communist party had always led to 'cam collaboration' and to appropried aluances between the Socialists and the meht. Historically, it is difficult to deny that the PCF argument was strong, but there was one major flaw in it. It. amoved the fact that what at called the 'reformist temptation' of the PN readers was also the temptation of an important section of the French people. The new middle strata and even the workers in the less if dynamic industries. Here, we touch apon one of the busiest probsems facing French Communists in the contemporary period vizhow to build a broad a lane, at which revolutionaries play a leading rule wheat the thistoricy have no been were well to review to have notices The problem is not we much to come not that majorns that a future socialist revolution is desirable, but that the present few as indicate solutions reachlange as the parts operated, says We shall have to return to thus usue in the final chapter

Shortly after the breakdown of the left summer, the March 1978. General Esection was held. The first ballot results were as follows , (2.1) March):

	Votes	Percentage of votes cast
PCF	5,870,402	20.6]
PS	6,451,151	33.6
MRG	603,392	3.1 40.0
PSU & Gouchistes	953,088	3.3 J
RPR ¹⁷	6,462,462	22.6
UDF17	6,128,849	ax 5 46.5
Other right	684,985	3.4
Ecologista	612,000	3.1
Macellaneous	793,274	2.8

On 13 March an agreement was signed by Marchais, Matterrand and Fabre, pledging murual second-ballot withdrawals, resumed discussions in case of electoral victory, and three-party representation in a left government in proportion to their strength. Despite this last-minute attempt to save left unity, the second round gave the government parties a slender inspority of 50.49 per cent (12,865,122 votes) against 49.29 per cent for the left (12,553,262 votes) and 0.22 per cent for other groups (57,418 votes). The distribution of sents was:

PCF	86-
PS	304.	200
RPR	153
UDF	104	257

(*) () For the left, the most significant aspect of the results was that for the first time in France's post-war history, the Socialists were ahead of the Communists. The PCF position was stationary because the three-quarter milhon votes it gained were offset by its percentage decline.

During the electoral campaign both the PCE and the PS took their stand on the Common Programme, with the former sayings-Vete. Communist to force the PS to 'reman' so the Common Programme, and the latter: Vote Socialist in order to implement the Common Programme, not a Communist programme. The Communists' slogan was 'real change', the Socialists', 'sensible change'. Moreover, both parties openly referred to the need to rebalance the left, with the PCF appealing for a big increase for its candidates, and the PS saying that at least seven million votes for the Socialists were needed. Of the two, it was the PS which came nearer to achieving its target, as it got 6,400,000 votes at the first ballot. It did not, however, take three million votes away from the PCF, which was Mitterrand's declared objective in 1972, and one sournalist commented that he 'had lost his wager' 10 With regard to the PCF's fortunes, Le Monde spuke of 'a glow decline", 19 but Onest-France charged the Communicationders with having chosen 'the strengthening of the party amodst defeat eather than the weakening of the purty amadel victory' in The party's most assistus loss was in Paris a drop of 5 per cent). In the provinces rts vote was slightly up in eacht regions, but slightly down in twelve others. Some gains were made in traditional Socialist 'besticata' (#.g.: Pas de Calon, Haune Vienne and Hause Garonne). In working-class centres, it did not lose anywhere and even improved its position in some areas, which led the leadership to speak of 'a class vote', i.e. a vote which meant commitment to change as understood by 'the party of the working class". At the second budge, left discipline was better then had been expected, given the demoralising effect that the backerings among alleged purtners was bound to have. Nearly all PCF voters supported a Socialist or a Radical in the second round, but the number of PS voters who did not support a Communist was in the region of 30 per cent (when the challenger was RPR, and 35 per cent. (when the challenger was UDF). This is a high figure, but not higher than in 1973. What is almost certain as that the 1973 defections stemmed from metafference whereas at 1978 they were caused by hostility and resentment.

The 1978 election was inconclusive and brought no joy to either the government or the left. All observers were agreed that the left's defeat was due to its distincty, but the big question was: what was the root cause of this distinsty? According to non-Communist opinion, the answer to this guestion was beyond doubt, it was the PCF which had caused the detent of the left by making impossible demands on its partners. The PCF leadership, on the other hand, claumed in a Politherent statement (20 March, that 'the French Communist Party bears no responsibility whatever for this actuation. The Polithureau invited the whole party to draw at the lessons from the recent battle and announced that the u.s. would meet at the end of April to assess the position. The internal debate mismined by the leadership monher ame a very heated our, and in addition to rotacies, it aim aunged on inner party democracy, i.e. the extent to which the rank and file are consulted and can influence decisions. A number of party members wanted the discussion to take place in the party preis and not only in the branches, but the sendership resected the stiggestion by invoking the party Ruses. Unfortunately, it was soon discovered that the rules working rule in the party same règle de fonctionnement du party), which was not very convincing. The promise that the 1979 congress would look at the matter did lattle to destroy the supersmon that the party landers were nervous and were afraid of the consessousses.

The most vecal of these consessataons were the thousand or so who signed as Open Letter, organization from a university breach at Aix. which was critical of the party a handling of the P5 and the MRG. It is difficult to optimize the precise number of doublests, and the vorting figures given by the CC on June do not tell the whole story because they do not reveal how many members kept quest out of lovalty whilst continuing to have using yangs. For what they are worth, three figures showed that about one hundred branches out of 27,000 and three area committees out of 2,600 had expressed their dangreement with the lendership. However, as appracedented pumber of entited books began to eppear, all written by people who and they had no intention of resigning but winted to change the party from within. The heat known of the contestance was Although and Ellinsten, both of whom wrote a series of articles in Le Manda. Although the two were philosophically and pulstically point apart, they agreed that in September 1977 the PCF leadership had taken up an 'unvisiding uttatude' . Flienomein's phrases and that it had been concerned with breakening the PS at any zeroe, even if it involved incrificing the Union of the left' Althumer's criticism). Both demanded that innerparty discussions should be 'horizognal' - between branch and branch - as well as 'vertical' - hotogen tempoles, and higher bodies. 31

Marchan replant to his interpal entics in the April 1978 CC maeting. Without narring my of them, he rejected all their organizational, at one stage, acathogic referred in 'deak-bound estallactuals'. It was an unfortunate phrase (which led to sported protests), but it would be unfair to regard his important outburst as a 'workerse' attack on intellectuals in much, because in the name speech he described the alliance of the working class and the intellectuals in 'now affects especie'. His main defence of the landership's recent actions was that if Communicate had yielded more in 1977, it would have meant giving up urgent occas and political measures. He added that it was by an more curtain that the left would have won on the bous of a wishy-westy programme and that if it had in fact wen under such conditions, the chances of making the PS change course would have been shammer than ever. With regard to the 13 March agreement, which some of the cruics had called a than, worthless agreement (an accordfeelen), he send that it did contain a number of definite PS and MRG pledees, and that at any cute, it was eather this servement or nothing On the breader sauces involved, he asserted that the crisis had, purpdescently, created both a desire for change and a fear of change, the building a 'union of the French people' was a complex matter because it monioned branging inguither deverse elements, atomic whom conflicts are bound to areas, and finally, that the PCP was still strong elector elly, and above all, industrially. He reported a record membership forms of 613,000. In the last part of his speech, estitled 'And ', he and that left unity remained the PCF's objective an that the party had 'no spare strategy'. It simply had to find new we of building unity. Thus, he used, would be done in the weeks also and at the 1979 congress. The congress would also have the task of itoproving the party's democratic life. Without decreasing the proc esal for a "horsesneal debute". Marchen came out sevent a "permana debate', on the ground that this would 'demonstic the party in the game of vigue petry bourgaous searchists' and that 'permanent dis cusion parairres decision and action'

A agasticant event at the end of 1978 was the series of discussions and debane arganized by the leadership on 9 and 10 December, at which four headred party intellectuals, including the most viscal consistences, were invited. Le Mande commenced that 'nothing like this had taken place in the PCF, not at any rate for forty years'. The paper added that despite continued disagreements, the leadership was, on the whole, supported 'on the essence of its policy'. One must also mention Cloude Willard's 1978 revised edition of his book in Secularity at communical françois; ¹³ is which the PCF haborian was critical of his own party's 'tectical mistakes' and 'blunders'. He rejected the view that the PS had As/had to the right by anying that Matterand had made his intentions clear on the day after he had against the Common Programme (as allument to his Vienna quinch), but he pressed his party's leadership for having attempted to prevent 'n normal-democratic erg of uniterated distributed.

From the point of view of the PCF's evolution, the 1969-7f period presented a number of contradictory features which can be differently expressed but all amounted to the same, almost paradoxical phenomenon of growth and declare at the name time. The growth and the declare were two sides of the same coin, with our influencing the other, and vice-view. An admirable example of Marxist disjection, perhaps, but past complete to the Marian party! There was a study membership growth and a conscidentian of the party's working-class sufficient and implications and at the more sums a commonly electronic student and a factory to was ever other mengl successes, there was the techniquest and a factory and the folkioness of a long-standing arm - a common government programmy - and at the same time the loss of Constraint influence and the spectrouler 'retorth' of the Sections party become of that vary programme; there was the fact that the PC.F had become a notional force to an extent that even the Popular Point and the Rountance-Laboration Communicate might have surrupt and at the same time a series of signs pointing to the semi-impotence of this grow force and to us matching to shape events in the direction it wanted, there was the same time magneton firm cumulations to a 'democratic read' and at the same time magneton of the Communication.

Leaving audit transact reasons, two main factors may be ungled out to account for such a structum, the evaluation of French success. and the way in which the Socialist party benefited from it. In May 1968, new metal strain had external the straighter, and the PCF had at lount the more of howers been the first and probably the only party to have operacional the May events in this halis. These new rocasi strain. - the technicions, the conferr, the spoilloctude, and to a loose extent, the farmers – were nationly drawn towards gastelnesse, but as posts at associates tectics had revenied their other bankrussey, they turned, not survival the many challenger of paye Assess, the PCP, but survivals the PS, whose maximes of anothersic and after-lieft abrancology proved a greater pitraction. Again, & was pure constant to the Marsist purty. that this ours switch from ultra-left communication to inclinecratic reforming believely (Dustraind Lengs's Margar assistance); of the justly busingments as a class whose ancia-constant installably in reflected in guitacal metabolity. The most vivid expression of the sweech was perhaps Record's evaluation from PSU passengers in 1988. to the honoratie, strategically anti-Communical references as 1974, when he external the PS and fought within it assured a representation with the PCF. If the PCF was anable to attence all their social furcio, it was mainly because they were very so-captable to any Communican ewing to their fundariound and way of life, but also fundament the party's democratic 'new look' had the unexpected offect of making the Socialsets appear more reliable mace they had been mapping the vertices of 'democratic socialism' for years.

The PS was able to excite the evolution of Prench recety to its advestage, not necessarily buculous its lumbers were cleverer than the Community - they may have been, but that was not the decreve factor - but because the alternative it offered the newconsers in the struggle was an atternative to both what they knew and had come to distance - Gouthern, with or without de Goulle - and to what they did not know and feared - community, with or without the 'Eura' label. The PS's 1969 electoral aethods did not mark the end of reformsom, but the end of one form of reformers, that of the Fourth Republic $ F1O, with its record of unsuccessful 'Third Porces' and 'Republi can Fronts', of anthonified participation in colonial repression. Violgam, Aluera, Sues), and at the businesses of the Fath Republic, of heavy support for de Goulle, Under Masserrand's able leadership, the new PS was determined to throw the SF1O heritage overboard, to commut itself to left unity, and to draw social support from the middle streets, all of which would help it to suppling the PCF and become the dominant party of the left. By 1978 it was well on the way to achieving these same. For the PCP, this represented one of the most serious challenges in its history, since it caused the basic issue of its own distinctive identity. It had to decide whether it would try and best the Socialists at their own name by dilution at socialist aims and revo-Jutnopery patters (us at suggested to do us the assumption aftermath of the Common Programme) or whether it would researt them. in such a new manner that they would be seen to be more credible and more resisting than PS solutions. In other words, if it chose the latter alternative (which it did), it had to show that the 'socialism in the colours of France' which it was advocating was the concrete answer to France's problems rather than a rehealt of 'models, to be found as the works of Marx. Encole and Lense, or in the expendence of existing socialist countries. To those who claimed that changes within the working class, the undespread urbanisation of the French population, the emergence of new middle strata (who, for the time being, were drawn towards the PS Front de classe because they were afraid of being 'swallowed up' by the working class), the rise of new movements such as the women's movement, the youth movement, the movement for the defeace of the environment and the like, had all contributed to make socialism obsolute, the PCF had to prove that 'socialisme à la française' was in fact the only solution to these very problems. Such proof had to be provided theoretically as well as practically, the second supert involving a new approach to left unity

It is the nearth for this new approach which dominated the 23rd congress (May 1979) and the 24th congress (February 1982). However, before examining these important congresses, together with the developments of the 1979-84 period, we must cost a glance at the way in which the PCF came of age to relation to the international Communit movement. This will be the object of the next chapter. 24

2 Marx called 'surplus value' the additional value created by workers over and above what they produce to earney their own needs. Surplus value in the source of the capitalist's profit, whereas the other value created by the workers is returned to them in the form of wages.

24 A separate chapter has been devoted to the relations between the PCF and the international Communist movement from 1947 to 1984, because it was felt that this would help to see this important issue in perspective.

CHAPTER $

Coming of age: from Cominform to 'Euro-Communism' and beyond (1947-84)

We shall examine the PCF's relations with the international Communist movement under three headings, the Commform, the CPSU acth Congress and its sequels, and the rise and fortunes of 'Eurocommunism'.

The Cominform (2947-55)

The Commform (Communist Information Bureau), which was set up in 1947, was a typically cold-war product. It was communism's answer to the Truman Doctrine. Officially it was not a new Committeen. but an organisation of nine parties (the seven European CFs which were in power, plus the PCF and the PCD for the purpose of 'exchanging views and information', but in practice it laid down the line for all CPs, and its pronouncements were authoritative. For behind the Cominform there was Comrade Stalin, the Great, the Wise. The first meeting (September 1947) was mostly devoted to a report from Zhdanov, in which the CPSU leader divided the world. into two hostile camps, headed respectively by the USA and the USSR. He called on the Communist parties in 'capitalist countries' to take the lead in defending national independence, peace and democracy. In the course of the discussion that followed, the PCF and the PCI were strongly criticised by the Yugoslavs. Kardeli and Dillos. and were charged with many crimes, including that of not having sufficiently exploited the post-war situation and that of having allowed themselves to be ousted from the government. Duclos, who represented the PCF together with Fajon, admitted some mutaket. but he denied that his party had lacked vigilance. Zhdanov and Materikov complained that his 'nelf-criticism' had not gone far enough and they took him to task for having called the PCF 's party of government. He replied that all he had meant was that the PCF was worthy and able to govern. The Zhdenov line about 'the two camps' subsequently bucates that of all CPs, and the PCP in perucular bucane increasingly and-USA and anti-government.

The only other claim to 'fame' for which the Cominform is remembered to its 1948 condestination of Tito because of his 'netionalistic deviation', i.e. his independence in relation to the USSIL Other crimes included putting the parentry before the working class, and the National Front before the Communist party. Moreover, in one of their letters to Tito and Kardeli. Statin and Molosov told them that they "locked moderny" bucause they were prusses their working achievements 'to the skies', forgetting that Yugoslovia had heen liberated thanks to Soviet sourcesco. The letter west on to say that 'as matters of revolution', the PCF and the PCI had 'assester moretr' then the Yugoday CP, and that it was 'n metter of rearet that the Soviet Army did not and could not give them that same help! Which it had given Tuecolay Communists. Above all, the French and the Itahum had 'honestly admened their serves', unlike the Yugoslav leaders who were personing in theirs. After the 1947 humiliation, this was sweat revenge for the two western CPs. In 1949 the Commitorin west one stage further and called upon the people of Yugoslavia to everthrow the most of 'transors' who were rubne them. From then newards Tito and his colleagues were vitaled by all CPs. The PCF was as vocal as others, feeling perhaps that it was getting its own back. on its former critics. It is not one of its proudest achievements. Neither was its defence of the rigged trials in eastern Europe which accurred in the 1940s, of which the most famous were those of Rask in Hungary (1949) and of Shanky in Carcheslovskin (1941). Both were accused of 'appear for foreign powers' and daily executed. Others were enther shot or miled. In his memours, Duclos argues that French Communion had acted in good faith and had been deceived by others, who withheld the true facts from them. Ignorance may be a partial excuse, but it is hard to condone the refusal to think for smercif facadentally, all the accused have made been postimenously. rebehildented.

In 1919, with Scales safely out of the way, Khrushchev took a guasher of naturatives to reduce international tension, and in particular he paid Tito a visit and apologised for the Commission's interference in Yagoniova's internal affairs, without actually withdrawing the 1948 political criticisms. The PCF assessed the event as part of the USSR's 'peace offensive', and in La Nauvella Critique, Prancis

Cohen wrote that Prench Communists were glad they were no longer cut off from 'n friendly people', adding that the Betgrade agraement had contributed to incornational disease. Although Scalin had not burn among either by the CPSU or by the PCF, the open rejection of one of his worst acts stude everyone stone that there was more to come. A year later, the noth Congress bembekell exploded, and de-Stalmouton burns in the Communist movement.

The CPSU 20th Congress and its coquels (1996-68)

The 20th congress opened on 14 February 1956. For the first size days it was busy ductioning the new adeas command in Khrushchev's report, especially the mearison that the 'ests-empericist forces' (the socialist countries, the national-liberation movement and the western workers) had grown stronger, that war was not mevitable; that the 'perceful co-existence' of countries with different social systems was both sossible and necessary, that each country would find its own read to socialism, and that in some of them, a penceful transition to socialism had become a realistic perspective, that there were new econtracture for Socialist-Communist co-contration, astronally and internationally, and finally, that the CPSU was resolved to restore the principle of 'cultictive leadership', and the 'norms of socialist. legality' which had both been violeted in the past owing to what he colled 'the colt of the individual'. It was this lost point which implied a critically of Stales, but only indepently since he had got been agened. However, on 24-25 February, at a closed session which was not strended by any foreign delegates.3 Khrushchev lounched a full-scale attack on Stales, charging him with having been a ryring who had sent thousands of annocess people to their deaths. The text of his speech was not released to the press or the public, but it was used by party propagandusts - or any rate a summary of it - when they reported back. to their branches. As for the foreign delegations they had so make do with hearter accounts, except that the delegates from the socialist countries, from France and from Italy were given the test of Khrushchev's speech in Russian) a few hours before it was made and were inked to return it unmediately and went it as top necret. The French. delegation (Thorex, Ducles, Cognet and Pierre Dotse) did to requested, and so did all the others. Years later, at the end of 1976, Marchais referred to the incident, mying that it would be up to bistorians to judge the party's then behaviour, but adding that 'today, after our 23md congress, it is unthinkable that we should not speak the truth on any question whetenever, and publicly's

On a June the American State Department scienced the text of the secret speech, without Moscow making any protest. Publicly, the PCP refused to consider it as authorizative and referred to it as 'the seport strebuted to Khrushchev', but servestly the leadership was described. It described Waldeck Rochet, Servin and Pases to Moscow to discuss the matter. Falou later told Harris and Sedous that Khrushchev had not only admirted the extremes of his speech, but had actually shows at to his guests. On being saked why, in that case, L'Humanate had and nothing about it, he replied: Busine Khrishthey said us that, officially, the report did not exact * That the PCF leadership should have accepted what virtually amounted to a CPS U instruction shows the extent to which 'the party of Lenia' could still course on the lovalty of foreign Communion, (All the other CPs hear must, including the PCL) On the other hand, the fact that private explanations had had to be given, at the PCF's request, can be seen as a first says of independent thenking, albeit very mild.

What meterod more than the 'official' equipment of the speech was its content. To all Community, the seveletion of Stales's crimes came. as a great shock, and many felt at as a personal transdy. Some could not bear the agony, and they left the movement, either nomly or discreetly. Those who remained, once they had got over the shock, wanted to know why it had all happened. One of the most foculal foreign critics was Toghern, who declared in an american with Newsel Argometic (June 1966) that a partial 'dependention' had taken place under Stales in the 'different purts of the social organism'. Two days later the PCF Potstburens usued a statement which carefully reframed from following Toginsti's suggestion, but which regretted the secrecy over Khrushchev's speech and demanded a 'deepened Margine analysis' of "Stalin's finite, their origin and the conditions in which they came about. A public PCP statement which criticised a CPS U action and urand Severt lenders to do something was very mald. endeed in comparison with what the party said mace, but at the time it was unprecedented. The 'desputed Martist analysis' of the Stake etc. duly came on 30 June, in a lengthy CPSU document. The emergence of Stalingum was explained in turns of objective factors (contralienting due to the hostale 'constabut encyclement'), of swecholomoul factors (Stake's arrogance, brussisty and morbidly suspectous nature), and of the incorrect Staleaut theory that the class struggle grows sharper at tociolism grows stronger. The resolution also attenuated to explain the behaviour of other party leaders by anying that they did take some counter-measures, but that a frontal attack upon Stain would have been aspossible because of his great prestige among the people. Moreover, many facts because known after Staba's death, 'chiefly in connection with the exposure of Berin's gang and the establishment of party countel over the meanty organs'. The PCP CC limited the tracinities as 's document of meaturable value for the international working-class movement'. In fact, despite its metric, the CPSU statement was by no means a full Marxin analysis of 'the cult', classify because the Soviet leadership was relacting to let one many shalmons out of the cupboard

As for the PCF leadership, its initial reaction to the auth congrues was partly one of support and partly one of criticism. The support went to the policies of penceful co-custence, penceful transition to ecculum, and Socialist-Communist co-operation, not mainly stit of loyalty to the CPSU, but above all, business these policies corresmended to the PCP's own belief and practice. In a sense, French Community felt that they had themselves passaged the views expressed by Khrushchay on these topics. The criticism concurred what Therez and Ducke as particular new as an unbalanced attack on Stake Thorez told Ceretti that a 'giornous past' had been 'sulfaed' by Ehrushehav, whiles Ducios complessed that the story that during the war Scalm had need a globe rather than detailed muon to dawn the Red Army's operations mainly did not ring true. The refusal to endorus a wholesale condemnation of Stales was not confused to provide reservarious, but it also came out in public statements, such at the one sumed by the CC on an March, which deployed Scales's 'violation of ancialist legality' but aggressively recalled his 'morits as a theoryticing and so a loader. What the loadership feared was that the whole truth about States might have a demonstrang effect on the mombership. The feeling among the answersty of contemporary Community is that this four was undounded and that the party as a whole would have gamed, not lost, if it had thoroughly discarded Staleaum.

But to what extent was the PCF Stalmant? Stalmann actual ap. of four elements - the 'cult' of the androdual leader, dogmentum, bureaucratic curtainment of degraceacy, and man terror and regger true against danialisms. With regard to the cult of Stalin, the PCF was certainly gualty, because it had come to regard the Soviet leader as the symbol of socialism. The fact that none of the French Communit haders had bed to work clearly with him (like Toghara, for example, when he was a Committee official' helped in the precess. The PCF alcited States the symbol rather than States the man. It passessately believed in the former and a hardly know the lotter. A second sepact of the 'cult' concerned Thomas, and an accument the PCF was described in the party of Maurice Thomas'. However, unake the cult of facins, the cult of Thoras was bound, gas on the dam's constitution but up the first that he was estimately approachable and had a good dard of purvened magnetism. The number of those who desisted him was probably smaller than the number of those who felt drawn sewards has. All the man, there is no doubt that the frequent enlages of Thoras were in had taste

Dogmasson afformed the PCF pubriculty and alcologically. It was because of States's degeneracy that Thorax did not work out as independent French strange, despite coursess strenger to do to from time to time. It was administrate dominations which was propositioned for the fact that for years, Pf. F intellectuals did not discuss other propie's verys, but morely exacted them. A case in pour was Serve's destructations, document as 1947 as decadent', whilet his surveis were discretized as Internature for growing green, Before him, André Gode had freed even worse for howing dored to had finit with the Sevent Lawre. and had been account of being a 'yenrouse. In spice of this, there were redressing forcers. In the polarical field, the PCF broke new ground with its Popular Front policy, in the north of Status's sumai refuctance. In the cultural field, the roots and the roots were parasets when Pt. F. midlicitude intellarenchy applied Marxings to their own areas in acence, are and ingrecore. People the the business Marcel Prenant, the strechniums Hours Walles, the economic Leaguests and Solast-Corpt. and the posts Aragon and Elward, were not more Statemet lucks.

On the seem of hypercentry and democracy, there was the depletphic tendency to wisty all demolecus and appearant and a frequent eray amplitude on discipline at the supump of front debute. But this was not due to Scalendary sychosomic. The party was num-legal in the 1900s, completely flight during the war, and frequently bounded in the 1900s. All this did not make his solver redgement. Moreover, it is a fact that the PS P under I horse was much more democratic than the C.PS L under States. There was much more democratic than the C.PS L under States. There had started his arrange criticism provided it was writer 'permissible' chapters. As for party discipling, it was not supound from above, but it mently standard from an act of fields one between to the Party, and this implied being in its weather and in its right to demand iron discipline in the bittle against 'the class enemy' Finally, the most minister aspect of Stalimans, its mass terror against disadents, could not have been a feature of the PCF's behaviour, mince it was not in power also the CPSU. The worst that can be said and it is had clough. In that French Communists incritically supported as the purges and ad the rigged trails. The main remain was the cult of Stalin, of course, but there was also the experience of the French Revolution. The bessel that in 1793 the Terror had been the only way to save the Republic must have given many PCF members an additional reason for thinking that the USSR and the measure countries, were defending themselves against real counter-

Although de-Stelinsection was at first slow and lukeweem, the 14th party congress, held in July 1956, was the congress which started the process. Both Thorex in his opening speech and Servin in his organisational report defended democratic centralism, but they both amplied that the trouble with Stalingers was that it had departed from such a principle by substituting the rule of one man for collective decisions and collective discipline. A few weeks before the congress. Thorez had told the CC that 'criticism and self-criticism' were more amportant then over, and that one of Stalia's faults was to have saught others the value of this method whilst he flouted it himself. The General Secretary had also gone out of his way to assert that one should not always expect craticion from below to be 'one hundred per cent correct. Even if the criticism is only ten per cent correct, one must learn to accept at ' At the congress stack, however, he felt the need to rebuke those who had 'nottily' demanded a thorough overhaul of the party's structure. But he did concede that there were errors to be corrected. It was all rather vague and general, admittedly, but even so, it was a modest start. Moreover, the tone of the 'Appeal to the Socialist committee which was instead at the congress was friendly and conciliatory.

The party's startude towards the intellectuals was another step on the way to de-Stalassetton. After an initial show of impotence in the face of the 'unreasonable demands made by some party intellectuals, the leadership became more tolerant. At time went on it was with its bleusing or taxit approval that a number of Communist scholars started to make an analysis of Stalianum and its roots. One of them was Michel Verret, who wrote an enary embodying the collective views of his colleagues on the editorial board of La Nouvelle Critique. With1947-$4 233 out condouing faith in Stahn, he tried to account for it by the tempurtion to paramolise power, a temptation which he mid was as old as the state insutution, and by the tener international situation, which led to the behalf that dissolithic unity and loyalty to the Chief were importtive. He also complained that the open hostship of those who 'hated the virtues of occasions as much as an facility' was partly responsible for the Communicate' going to the other extreme

The modern PCF gasessment of the party's behaviour in 1956 in generally summed up in the now current phrase, 'le recard de 1956'. The driey did not merely concern the acknowledgement of Stalin's faults and errors, but firm of all the working out of a strategy free from the Stalianst dogma that the Soviet experience constituted a universal 'model'. Such a dogma did not always lend the PCF to neglect the ammediate tasks facing Communists in France, but it did prevent it from conducting its propaganda about future accasion on the basis of a concrete analysis of French resisters, as we had occasion to notice in previous chapters. In this respect, Marchani's manage, at the 1979-23rd congress is againficant.

We drew attention ourselves to the question of the 1956 driny. At that time, our Party did not draw all the necessary tensors from the C.PS U noth Congress. This concerned of course what had happened in the Soviet Union during the Stalin ern. But some committee have pounted out that what was also at stake. — one might say above all—was the consideration of the original reads, adapted to our conduction, through which the people of France can travel towards occulants.

The first immediate sequel of the noth congress was the Hungarian crass in October-November 1956. Popular pressure had compelled the Stalmatt, Rakou and Garo, to rough. Their successor, large Negy, tried to introduce liberal reforms, but was not able to stem the tide of revolt. As a result, four of his manusters, led by Janos Kadar, argued that popular discontent, although legitimate, had gone too far end was aided and aberted from outside. They farther argued that the only way to stop the daily hangings and shortings of hundreds of Community by angry growds was to get Soviet troops (already stationed in the country under the proce treaties) to intervine. For its part, the Soviet government was becoming shortingly troited that Hungary might be lost to the 'socialist camp', and on a November the Soviet army occupied Budapest, deposed Nagy and replaced him with Kadar. Western public opinion and western governments denounced the intervention on a gross violation of Hungary's soverespory and dissertion (Kaghar on a "propagat". Although the landershape of all Communici parties detended the Seviet action (after heated debests behind cloud doors in some coast), a ophotopical musiker of rankand-falors more so appealled that they tree up their party cards. In Proper a wave of east-communium fathrood: PCF members and PCF buildings ware gracked by armed gauge, and the party was minimal on all radios, from the right and from the left. For example Sartes, who had become a "tallow traveller", has over phrase, at the totos, arrored all relations with the PCF and read that after having carried the title of parts des fuesties during the wor, it had become in parts der familieurs. But the landership stock to its grim. It metaland the U.S.S.R., partly out of traditional establishes, and partly in the hight ed as own analysis of the Mungames observes. It merepreted the reports of wastern and spaper currespondents about the White Terror", the arms and emigric pouring into Hungary from trighbouring construe such as Austria and the materials of the Carbolic Primote. Cardinal Mandressey, that Hungary should should ammuniment and return to a system of prevate property', has provid that there was a real danger of counter-revolution and that the Hungarian working class, demonstrate by Raham's crumer and by Nagy's apportunities', was not strong operath to bur the road to factous without outside help. As for the involvement of many workers in the revolt, it was not denied, but it was explained in classically from legitimete gravations, chronity aughented by the estatute of secularity

The emercianous of the Hungarian crims on the PCF's internal his ware great. According to Medvedry," Theres told Khrushchev in 1918 that the party lost half to members become of Hungary. That may have been an emigrariann," but the number of reorganization was high. There were also combined of decoupout general purity satellititools. Four Communicat Arrives. Claude Roy, Roger Visitorid, Claude Margan and J. F. Raiband, appended their against to an Open Letter to the Sover government, which had the support of such tion-Commission to Server and Vercure. An even more serious angust then Hungary was the Sino-Soviet dispute, which arupted in 1981 and became therper to time went on. After having metally supported the 20th Congress has, the Chance CP busin to deplure the CPS U's excessive demoration of Stake, and especially, to criticine its views on pesceful co-existence and pesceful transition to socialism, which were described as 'revisionist'. In 1962 Khrushchev was accused of 'cownector' by Pelung bucause he had removed Soviet muscules from Cube in return for Kennedy's pledge that the USA would not proude the island. Man council the plures that 'amperation are paper tigers', to which Khrushchev replied that the timers had nuclear touth. Whilst continuing to proclaim its attachment to peaceful co-existence, the CPC declared that was was practically mevitable to long in 'imperiation' existed. By 1464 it had become obvious that the two Communit mants were at loggerheads, all the more in stace there had been armed clashes between them over freener adjustments. This came as on unpleasant shock to all Commoneys who had always magned that unlake capitabet states, socialist. countries could live as harmony unce their economies, freed from the profit motive, did not lead them to pursue 'expansional name'. But the univ facts were there. Markets had to admit that ancedown may remove the chief cause of astronal agragonisms, but that the process was neither automotic new immediate, and that it was time to remember that Marx homeelf had warned that the new success arming after the destruction of capitalism would be 'stanged with the birthmarks of the old society from whose womb it amorgon' (Crimque of the Gothe Programme, (875) What had started at a Sino-Soviet dispute burnion a paper point at the state and could be distributed and employed at majority of CPs, including nearly all the western ones, being on the CPSU's ude, and a substantial minority on the CPC's. Moreover, Maniet groups were formed in many countries in opposition to the existing CPs. These groups are will alive at the time of writing, but so for they have fasied to streact more than a handful of followers in the west

In addition to the CPSU, the two parties which were most violently attacked by Peking for their elleged 'revisionium' were the PCI and the PCF Both of them spermedly defended their views. According to Lily Marcon, the contem of the PCF leaders' refutation of Maoust policies was sound, but 'the unconditionality which they displayed and their way of mechanically and automatically copying the CPS U's somewhat postated the Chinese charge that their 'midden reversal' was archestrated from Maccow. There is no doubt that the PCF's case against the CPC was weakened by an almost servite alignment with the CPSU, but this concurred general aware only and not the various aspects of PCF history and policy (e.g. the party's alignedly historium support for the Viernamese nationalises) which were also part of the argument between the two tides. Manages, the Chinese charge of 'gadden reversal' was upfounded with regard to the main assess anvolved in the debate, for although the PCF's stand was new, it represented, so we have seen, the chinese of the party's own thinking over the years.

It was mostly about foreign policy, revolutionary strategy and laft waity that the PCF and the CPC wave in therptot dangerement. On foreign policy, the French (and Soviet) case was that socialism now exerts a 'documer sufficence' on world events and in able to check 'the normal laws of ancertalism", in particular its drive to war. An October. 1963 editorial in the Colors die communisme declared that 'the nature of superiolism has not changed, but only its pecasbalines and its power. The same article criticated Chana for refusing to man the partial aucleur test-bas treaty, remarking that de Goulle's France had been the only other major power to take a number stand. On revolutiomany strategy, the article asserted that the perspective of the peaceful treamtion to sociation did not imply 'allumons about the nation of capitalism", but the building of a popular alliance, bread and strong enough to make capitalist forcible resistance to escal change virtually amproachie. With regard to the Change view that the main revo-Intronery struggle was now between the poor countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America, the so-called 'storm contras of the revolution'. and the rich industrialised countries (including the USSR), the PCP declared that is was up-Marson and that is drove a wedge between the national-liberation movement, on the one hand and the socialist countries and the international working-class movement on the other. Finally, French Commonute repudanted the Chinese charge that co-operation with the Socialises smacked of reformass. They end that at was the only way to defeat de Goulle's possessor personnel in this immediate present and to ensure majority support for socialism in the factors. Although the PCF statemen strongly anti-Macost on those issues to that day, one may note that when Man deal as 1976 the party's assumpt of condolence to the CPC duclosed that 'we only want to remember his wonderful rule, our common struggles, our solidarity'.

The final, belated sensel of the 20th Congress was the 100f Cancle crisis. Chechoelovakus was the less one. European country to get rid of its Stalinest leadership. When it did so in Japaney 1968 by removing Novotny, and when the CPCs adopted a democratic 'Action Programme' in April, the country began to embark upon a much-delayed process of liberalisation. As in the case of Hungary, right-transmit tried to benefit from the attention, but unuke the Hungaries Consmanages the Caech CP remained firmly in control. In state of this, the Soviet leaders were uneasy about 'mourt bodox' experiments and they sounded the alarm, werning that there was a denser of 'preceful counter-revolution. At the buncases of August at looked as if the differences had been overcome, because the Carchi and five other Warnew Pact countries (the USSR, Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria and the GDR) massed a Ductaration at Bratislava which piedeed resourt for one another's independence and co-operation for common aims. But on 21 September, the Warney Pact troops, led by the Soviet Union, entered Czechoslovakia on the pretext that they had been invited by un-named Cauch Community to help amon the imminent counter-revolution. In fact, no such investings had been issued, and there was no sum of an ampending counser-revolutionary coup. However, the troops did not leave. This time, the solidarity of all Communist parties was include, and most of the western CPs samed strong projects. The PCP, which had tried unsuccessfully to madette butween Moscow and Prague (in July Waldack Rochet trevelled to both capitals), immediately expressed 'its warprice and reprobation', in a Polithureau statement issued on the very evening of the intervention. and unanamously endorsed by the CC the day after. The CC further declared that it was up to the Cauch Community and people to referenced and develop succellars in their country. Never before had French Communius so openie cruscated the Soviet Union, and Weldeck Rochet, in a radio interview, admitted that it had been done with 'bitterness and some heart-rending'. He americal, however, that the PCF had not become 'ents Soviet'. On the 27th, a Soviet-Carch agreement was ugged in Moscow. The PCF clasmed to accept at face. value the undertaking by both parties to implement the Bratislava principles', but it did not mention the fact that the Cauch leaders had been forced to 'negotiate' under duron. Nother did the party renew its demand that the troops should be withdrawn. It looks as if, surprised by its own holdness, it did not wish to go away further. Did it also hope that by refruining from outspoken criticism it might prevail upon the Soviet leaders to soften their position? If so, that hope was certainly not justified by subsequent events, for the so-called 'northalisation' led to the removal of Dubcek, coundered too 'noft' and unreliable, and to his replacement by Husak at the head of the party.

Understandably, the Caech crisis greatly shook the PCF membership, not only because, as in Hungary, force had been used by a great succeives grower but bucquee on that occasion is had clearly not been necessary, and the party had said so. Most French Communists shared their leaders' 'butterness' and supported their action, but some feit they had gone too far, and others that they had not gone far enough. Thorez's widow, Jeannette Vermeersch, was among the former, and Garaudy among the latter. The first eventually rengand from her leading position, and the second was rebuited for having publicly called on the Soviet leaders to 'get out'. As for the rest of the leadership, it gradually gave up its moderate stand and became increasingly critical of developments in Czechoslovakia. In July 1972 the Poistbureau came out against the trial of Czeck doubleuts, and in 1977 it condemned the horassment of the 'Charter 77' supporters, paying that "the use of such methods arreasonly socalls the arbitrariness of a trace pest'.

"Euro-communium" and boyond (1968-24)

The PCP's first show of sudependence in relation in Moscow was the 'surprise and reprobation' at expressed when Caschoslovakas was invaded by an Warnew Pact albas. Two further signs that followed were the party's revised stand on international Communist conferences and its new approach to the socialist compares. The dissolution of the Communion in 1943 and of the Communion in 1946 had left a wind in the movement, and the post-Stalin era witnessed the attempt to revive international unity in a new guise, by the holding of international Communion conferences whose decisions would be morally binding on all CPs although they could not be constitutionally enforceable. The attempt came mainly from the CPSU, but it must with stiff opposition and had eventually to be given up. The first critic was Toghard, who suggested that what was needed was 'unity in diversity' and 'polycomzium'. This last term was unfortunate because it gave the to different interpretations. According to the Italians, all it meant that the discentralisation of the Communist movement, but others, especially the PCF, insimed that, inertify, it amounted to the creation of starry centrus.

The first world conference of CPs was held in Moscow in November 1960 and was attended by $1 parties (out of a total of $7). with the Yugodays being the most notable obsentoes. After many behind-the-evene discussions, a long document was unsaumously adopted, which pledged the movement to penceful co-examence, perceful transition to exceeding where practicable, solidarity with national-liberation increments, and respect for each Communist. party's susonomy According to Robneuz, Thorez sided with Khrushchev at that morting, as order to exploit the Sino-Soviet dispute (very much in evidence during the conference private setmons) and to achieve a PCF conditional support for the CPSU. Spour operar are rall concent conditionnel. 18 That may have been the case, but whatever 'conditions' the French leader may have put forward, has committations were manustralizably pro-Soviet. He reduction. Man's these that 'imperialists should be despessed strategycally but taken serrously tactically' and called it 'confused resonant' He further asserted that the unity of the world Communist movement rested on acknowledging the CPSU's 'wanguard rule'

The CPS U aand congress, held in October 1961, was it a sense a 'trans' world conference because many C.Ps had sent their ton leaders as delegates, with the exception of the Albanians who had declared the invitation to attend. They were attacked by Khrushchev from the congress rostrum, and through them everybody knew that it was the CPC which was being criticised for its 'dogmetrem' and for charging to 'the cuit of the individual'. In fact, the Chinase deleasts, Chou-en-Last, publicly rebuked the Soviet leader, left the congress, and went to the Lexus-Stalin managements for a weerth on Lexus's tomb and another one on Status's. Khrushchev's stamedone retaliation was to order the removal of Staha's body from the mausoleum, a greture which Life Marcon describes as 'greateness and mecabre' 12 The PCF supported the CPSU throughout. During the two years that followed, Chans and Albama loudly demanded another world conference. so that they could defend themselves before all brother parties', but until 1963 the CPSU, supported by the PUP, showed great reluctance towards the idea, arguing that as international meeting had its X.

be 'carefully prepared'. However, in the antenna of 1963 the roles were reversed because the Soviet leaders now felt confident that they could mointe Clum. A close sign that tumes had changed was that despite the support of old faithfuls anch as the PCF, many CPs, although opposed to Claimere policies, felt that the Soviet proposal smarted of 'encommunication'. It was then that the PCF gradually marted to shift its ground. Whilst still supporting the holding of a world conference, it differed from the CPS U as demanding 'a more limited agenda' rather than the discussion of all contentions insues. The claims was reached in February 1968 (before the cross in Caechoslovskin) at a 'preliminary consultative inceting' of sixty-seven CPs, when Marchaia declared that the unity of the movement could not be achieved by 'proclamations, but [required] tennecous, innovatory efforts'. It was the PCPs views which prevailed in the end, not the CPS U's.

The second - and to date, last - world conference was held to June 1000, and there was only one stem on the agenda, 'the struggle against. apperatum" is was encoded by accepty-free parties, with China, Albanis and again Yagoslavas being among the absentees. The fittal document, which five parties refused to sign, and some maned only in part, declared that there was no 'world centre' and that each Comspunist party decided its own policies independently. Moreover, it appeals admirted the existence of differences among Community, stating that they should be overcome by debate and should not preclude ungy assent unpersolum. Finally, the 1969 conference was the first one at which the non-Communist press was present, and Marchaia, in his report to the PCF CC, was able to boom that 'never was a conference of Communist Parties less "secret" Lily Marcon. speaks of a 'policy of transparence'12 and points out that for the first time the Soviet public were informed of other Contratation parties! value through the full conference reports which at seared in their Breit.

Despite the obvious Soviet wish to hold further international conferences, only biliteral and regional meetings took place after 1969. Among the lotter, the most agasticent were the 1973 conference on Vistness, attended by twenty-seven European parties, including the Yugoslava for the first time aince 1948, and the 1976 Berlin conference, attended by twenty-nine European parties, again with Yugoslava's participation. At that last conference Brezhnev graciously canonical that 'every party contributes to the development of revolutionary theory' and argued that differences should be settled by 'commedely discussion'. But the very principle of the validity of international conferences was challenged by Marchaus, supported by most western C.Ps, when he demanded 'more flexible gatherings' which would not necessarily be concluded with the adoption of a document' One such 'flexible authoring' was the April 1980 Paris conference, aponaged by the French and Polish Communities, which ended not with a document, but with an 'Appeal to the peoples of the world', urgang them to support and fight for all moves towards disarringment and detente. Twenty two parties attended the meeting, but a number of them declined, among them the PCI, the CPGB, and the Spinish C.P. According to son-Communist critics in the west, the real aim of the conference was to prevent the molation of the USSR in the Communit increment after its military intervention in Afghanswan. This, they say, accounts for the PCI's refusal to ettend and for the PUF's willingness to act as one of the spotumes. As for PCF comments, they dealt mostly with the estensible purpose of the conference - peace - and with what was regarded as its success - the storre fact that it was held at all. As for the absence of some parties, it was not fiercely attacked, but merely regretted, and Marchan wrote in has 1980 book, L' begow as: present. "This mutative has appealed to a great number of parties, which is good. Some choice not to come. which is their own business, and should not be over-dramatised."

With regard to the Pull's new approach to the socialist countries. the most significant sandmarks were the 24nd congress 1976), the publication of L URSS at nour (1976), and the tard congress 1979 Before public craticism of the Soviet Lagon was voiced at the 1976 congress, a number of minor incidents had laid the ground, e.g. Aragon's 1966 article in L. Humanus, criticising the sentencing of the disadents, Daniel and Sinjavsky, and saying that it was more harmful to the interests of socialism than the works of Danies and Superview could have been', the 1970 editorial again in I. Humanite, deploying that we Jews had been sentenced to death in Leningrad for having bijacked a plane, and saying that the extreme harshoess of the verdict asems out of all proportion to the facts, and the 19 5 finitbureau statement following the showing of a 13 documentary on Soviet lobour camps, which said that if reality corresponded with the (the PCF, would express its deep surprise and inmost formal reproduction. "Surprise and reproduction" again, but this time, the first one was 'dom' and the second one 'most formal'

In his opening speech to the 22nd congress Marchan devoted, special attention to the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. After recalling the community of objectives and doctrine between them and the PCF, he wear on so say that it was the existence of that community of assest and outlook which autitled French Communities to criticist what they thought was strong, especially the 'represerve' measures' measures' transfer desired its image. At the same congress Henri Mafterg, a CC member, replied so the organization that the PCF's criticisms might play uses the hands of the bourgooner and each.

What the bourgeomet unit against socialism is not our purty's responsible baguings, but, also, the facts which provide a: One can defeat false above with current adeas, without resorting to the kind of repression which, when it recurs at a secrebit country, deeply burts us or Communists. We do not think that socialism meads that. Very much the progress, it has being things to do. And a door things to much better us so many fields.

The debate about the socialist countries was given a fresh impetus by the publication, in the summer of 1978, of a controversal book, L'URSS et mess, wratten by five PCF academics (one of whom has nince left) who had expert knowledge of the Soviet Union. On the day the book came out the Polisbureau described at an a creative contributton which was destined 'to remodel the very method of gradying and coundering the Soviet Useon'. The Introduction, written by France Cohen, sets the tone by mentioning the communications of a technist tocaty. Although Marsists are facilities with the concept of contradiction, they had tended to forget its real meaning, largely under Stales's enfluence, for whom dejectics was executably the confact between the old (necessarily bad) and the new (necessarily good). This inordistic view tonded to encourage the idea that contraductions are the accuracy of class securies and will secucion make way for "harmonious relevious" under accisious and communium. That was not Mark's view. To him, the sun of the revolution was not to do swer. with contradictions altogether, which would spell the end of life, but to lay the social basis upon which 'the irreconcilable contradictions of capitalism' cannot aying and to build a metery in which contradictions can be overcome fairly surfuly and paraleuty. The Introduction also encicion the PCF for its deleved de Stationerson and Thorus for not having told the whole truth at the time of the 30th congress.

The introduction is followed by an chapters and a Conclusion. The first chapter, written by Cohen, is a hustorical autient which shows the

The third chapter, writins by Coloni, Disselbst and Robot, is about excel more care. After enamening the three main social entransmum as bornet meanty - the working class, the promotely and that graditioners - it discusses the view that there is a 'new class', deads up of state and party officials. glowly storing 'nowards more and more sectaium'

Since 1978 there has been a marked shaft of emphasis, of which the element expression was the assessment given by the 33rd congress. (1979) about the ancialist countries' 'globally positive balance-shoot'. However, the compute did not so back on its embount of what the party stall calls 'the luminations on democracy' in the Soviet Union and other cost-European countries. In 1980, alone of all 'Eurocommunist' parties, the PCF supported the Soviet military intervention in Afghanisms on the ground that the Afghan people had the right to sak for Soviet sammance in the task of purpose down counterrevolutionaries who were themselves helped by foreign amperialists. On an January, when Marchau was saked on TV why Italian and Spenish Communists had not taken the same stand, he replied. 'Is say name Bertinguar or Carallo? The PCF lave down at lane independeatly, without conmitting Brezhney, Berlinguer or Carillo." The party claimed that it had not given up its traditional stand on the right to self-determination, but that it was "the imperialists" who were thressessing the right of the Afghan people to go ahead with their 'democratic, anti-fundalist revolution', 'Revolution is not for export, neither is counter-revelation', was how Marches summed up the PCF postson.

It was at the same time that the General Socretary went to meet Brezhaev in Moscow. A joint communique was insued, mixing that the two parties would co-operate for common some despite their differences. Non-Community opinion interpreted the event as a return to the PCP's alacament with Moscow and in an endorwement. of the USSR's action in Afghanistan, that Marchan himself had a different interpretation. First, he distanced as a 'connecidence' the fact that the joint meeting had taken place at the same time as Soviet trough had entered Afghanestas and med he had not gone to Moscow to discuss the Afghan more. Secondly, he made much of the fact that the communication referred to the existence of differences between the two garries and he send it was quare as achievement to have not the CPSU to acknowledge this fact publicly. One caust admir that it was indeed a novelty. At the end of January, Marchan told Radio Luxembourn. that if he had been in Moncow at the time of Sakharov's beauthment to Gorky, he would have 'expressed (has apposition to it'. 'There would have been no joint communique", he added, for he 'would have flown back to Purh the following day' once again the related states of 'socialist democracy' and of the Soviet attirade towards it in relation to other east European countries. The PCF's first statistical on the attoition was made by Morchan when he spoke at the Fete do? Humanusis in September and said that it was up to the Polish people, the Polish government and the Polish Communists 'to overcome the difficulties and to contribute to the strengthening of including Polish'. Subsequently the PCF press developed three main themes – support for the Poles in their efform to 'democrature' the country, support for the independence of trade unions, and demicrations of the 'hypocray' of the western governments and media which backed makener maintains in Polish while condemning them in France. With regard to the possibility of Soviet intervention, the PCF discribed it is 'unthinhable', a word which seems to mean both that it is not lakely to happen and that French Communists reject it is a visible solution.

Finally, a few words about 'Euro-communium'. As has already been pointed out. 13 the phrase was coined by the western media in the 1970s. It is far from being an accurate label because non-European parties, such as the Japanese, upov be und to have endocated its key concepts, whilst some western CPs, such as the Portneuese, have resected them. As far as the PCF is concerned, it never liked the phrase, and it even stated that it contradicted the party's behef that there are no 'models' of socialism, either universal or regional. Intailly, however, it did not protest too vigorously against its use, for it was anxious to show that, like other western Communist parties, it had broken the 'markelical cord' which had tend at to Moscow. Balanceal meetings between the PCF and other 'Euro-communist' parties (Italian, Spanish, Japaness and British) took place, of which the most femous were those which were held between the PCF and the PCL the two largest Communist curtain in western Europe. It was no necret that ever same 1916, the rift between the two parties had grown widet and wider. Their reportschament was all the more epectacular, emocally when Enrico Berlanguer and Marchaes touthy addressed a busy bubble meeting in Paris in 1976. After 1978, a definite cooling-off took. place, as the two purper' assessments of the succeise countries, of social-democracy and of the struggle against 'imperation' were substantiatly different in their emphasis and, to some extent, in their actual content. As for the phrase 'Euro-communium', at has practically disappeared from the PCF vecabulary. On the rare occasions when it is used, it is generally to welcome the democracic ingredient of the concept, on the one hand, but to protest spainst the restrictive character of the label, on the other. For example, as his 1980 book L'exposs an présent Marchais complained that Euro-comminants had not paid sufficient attention to the maractive expenences of such CPs as the Portuguese, Greek, Latin American and middle sosters CPs, and of other revolutionary forces is the three continents outside Europe He demanded 'a little humbry' from the west European left and advocated in new garment' for Euro-communium, which amounted is fact to its replacement by what he called 'a new inter-nationalism'. Two years later, at the 24th congress, he again demanded a new form of 'international solidarity' with all Community parties and esti-imperialist forces. 15 The Resolution adopted at the congress made the same point and stated that Euro-communium was 'a debatable expression, because it was too narrow'. 16

Coming of age: from Communist opposition to Communist ministers (1979–84)

Forvet observes that, 'although flathionable, "anapahot history" is full of gaps and instards'. The 1979-34 period is indeed too recent to allow one to stand back and assess it in perspective. On the other hand it is packed full with crucial events which it would be a pity not to relate, even if their analysis is bound to be partial and provinced. We shall examine in turn the 23rd congress and its sequels, the 1981 elections, the 24th congress, and the first three years of joint PS-PCF government participation.

The zyrd congress and its sequels (1979-ft)

The 23rd congress claimed that it continued the previous one and merely applied as strategy to new conditions. The chief povelius were the assertions that left unity, described as 'irreversible', must begin with unity at grass roots level as the necessary prelude to funity at the top'; that the notion of separate stages leading to a final 'break' stust. make way for the view that social change is a continuous process hence the replacement of 'advanced democracy', which implies a fixed stage, by 'democratic advance'; that this democratic advance will not be achieved 'through a Grand Sow (a big social upheaval), be it an electoral Grand Sonr', but through a series of step-by-step stubborn strangles, 'whose form and pace cannot be programmed straight off gor dictated from above'; that the PCF's goal is 'selfmanagement socialism' (le socialisme autogestionnaire), i.e. the people's own activity to achieve change and their direct control over the means of production once these have become public peoperty; and that all these same require in great mass party, a party of struggle and of government', which is the Communist Party. Further illustrations of the new course included the general title of the congress resolution. The future begins now, and the adoption of a new party constitution. and rules.

The street on antegorines was probably our of the most striking changes. Below 1977, the PCF had little tune for the assumpt, when it that not in fact treat it with issues in May 1960. Its augusticance was that a represented the reaction of humanicistic or 'state excellent' tand as such was an anasted criticism of the Sovett 'model', where bureaucrates transferant stall prevent; and a call to increased popular. activity. The last point helps to understand the 3 pd congress coperation of tears. It was one which channel to take into account the positive aspects of the Common Programme - its advanced second consent - as well as its 'demobilising offices' - the fact that it forcered the division that the names of a government programme by the hift-wing parties was in could a supresse victory which religional mass struction on a country role. The a sed congruen executed that unity count buses in action over a multitude of innoted objectives, that it was actions that led, and to one agreement 'at the top' but to a momber of agreements, each one the result of propular strangers and a statistics for further struggles, and that this was not a mound boot, a jet after after the fadore of the Common Programme, but the only way to braid a more solid, more listing unity. Moreover, the congress took the wew that many among different mend protein required the gradual evercommon of the obstacion constituted by devergent asterests. In his opening speech Marchain doctored. 'It is up the struggle taking ploct helow that these obstacles will be overcome, that the convergence of incorous will manifest freelf !

An article is the 24 October 1980 hone of Revolution spake of another nevery. The author, June Machai Carala, argued that for a long time the PCP's emerging of left unity had been at bottom, 'frontest'. In the Community vocabulary 'frontests' in the pubicy triureby the CP builds a front of struggle with other ferons, such as the Land Front, the Popular Front and the like, in order to achieve terminate objectives (such as burring the read to forcests in the 1990), while remaining its ultimore goal of attacker revolution tinder Community featuring in other words, there was no had between the alkaness of the present and the building of occasions is the future. The 1990 congrue, according to Catalo, broke new ground. It did not triggers a return to the accurrent past of United Front from below unity, nor a return to the outpoded forms of unity which were valid at the time of the Popular Front. What is afformed was a new policy altogether.

promble which courted any inference to 'the dictatorship of the prelatanat', as recommended by the 22nd congress, and morried instead that 'the read to excession adopted by the PCF is peaceful, democratic, dependent on the majority's will [majoritaire] and physicate. In the groundle, the party's theory was no longer described as 'Marzann-Leasasan', but as 'screenific socialism', in order to show that it was not a set of treths to be found in the classics. but that it was constructly being curiched. Three alterations to the rules themselves stood any. The first one concerned conditions of membership. Out of these lad always hous, as advocated by Lema. that a Communist must work in a party mail. The $976 formulation said that a Consequent 'most belong to a cell' (article 1) which helps han/her to take part in the party's activity (article 2). The first article plan declared that acceptance of philosophic materialism was not a condition of membership. That had always been the case, though at times in theory only, but it had never been embraned in the party constitution. The second change onscerned internal discussion. which had been a bone of convention between the landership and the contentationer in 1978. In addition to the 'obligatory' pre-congress. discussion, there would now be discussion in the columns of the party press whenever the C.C issueched an internal debate on an important. political issue. Finally, there was a special emphasis on 'workplace cells. After saying that the cell was the basic party unit and listing three different kands of call - workplace, readential and reral - the rules added that his a revolutionary party, the PCF is organized premarily at workpince cells, the docume field of class structle and polytical battles". The leadang bodies elected at the congress sociuded a granter sumber of women (eight new open on the C.C.) and of intellectuels (name new ones). The former decerns of La Nouvelle Cratiques. Francous Hancker, was not re-elected to the C.C.

Shortly after the 3 yed congress, the electrons to the European attentibly were held. The PCF into received 30 6 per cent of the votes ener; the PS-MRG joint lists, 23.7 per cent, those of the UDF, 27.4 per cent, and the RFR's, 16.1 per cent. 38.8 per cent of the electorate abstanced and 3.3 per cent returned a blank bullot paper. The PCF compage was waged around the serve of national undependence, which, as interpreted by the party, required opposition to the EEC's example to Span, Portugal and Grunot (which would have bud effects on Prench agriculture and industry, it was classed), opposition to all plans 'worked out in the secrecy of Brussels cubanets' which involved the curtailment of French industries, e.g. the Davignon Plan for steel, and opposition to extending the powers of the European parliament at the expense of national parliaments. The Pointbureau committeed that it had been an achievement for the party to have maintained its electoral position by campaigning along on such insues it also chose to interpret the high number of abstentions as a sign of opposition to the EEC, ignoring the fact that many of them streamed from sheer indifference. With regard to the PS and the MRG, the Pointbureau merely complianed about their anti-Communist 'aggressiveness', but made no analysis of the PCP's finiture to detach voters from them, despite an internive campaign against the Social-anti 'shaft to the right'.

As the 23rd congress had set steelf the task of combetting 'all illusions', one of its immediate consequences was that the PCF chose to swim against the tide. Non-Communists saw this as a sign that the party was hardening its position in the aftermath of the 1978 electoral detest and the death of the Common Programme, but the PCF leadership assisted that the Communist solutions were the only ones. which could get France out of the crisis, and that even if the majority of French people were not yet aware of this, it was the duty of genuine patriots' to put them forward. The leadership also denied that the PCF was away in a self-amposed ghetto, arguing that it was temporarily stolated because its stress on the need for the people to do the s fighting themselves was bound initially to have loss appeal than the more comfortable 'Leave it to us' approach of other politicisms. Be that as a may, the post-13rd congress period was one during which the PCF went out of its way to emphasiae its distinctive identity as a rese attentity parts. It researcted its bonds of scadarity with revolutionaries the world over expectato, those who were in power, and it drew a sharp contrast, day after day, between itself and the reformast' PS, coauming that social-democrats were in favour of austerity for the workers and profes for the besses. The Social stairctainted by veying that the PCF had gone back to its sugrained Stalinism', that it was andulging in 'crude demagogy', and that its intemperate attacks on its former partners had turned it into an objective ally of the regame. Moreover, the PCF's stand in relation to events in centern Europe added fuel to the PS fire, all the more so made the PCF was waging a lone buttle, first, in defending the Sovjet military intervention in Afghanistan,1 and later, in stressing the need for negotiated surrements between the Polish government and the unions, instead of wholly supporting 'Solidarity', as the PS had done. As we shall see, these foreign policy differences did not disappear when Commissions jound the government in 1981 (see below), especially over the issue of spartial lew as Polical (Ducember 1981).

As the two left-wing parties grew further spart, so did the CGT and the CPDT. The CGT described its rival a moderate policies as alignment with the PS, and the CPDT counter-charged by saying that the CGT wasted to prome the social classite at order to strong-then the PCF in March 1981 Edmond Marc, the CFDT leader, accused the Community of being 'tomicarum' and blanded by 'party faculticies,', to which uttack the PCF replied with an opposite all workers to reject such charges as 'abstrant and defaustory', and to demand 'a frank debute' meteod of Marc's 'hate campagn'.

Another consequence of the a ted constens was that the Communists encouraged 'popular intervention' in supportus fields, particularly as the industrial field. They supported the stanlworkers' strikes and demonstrations against the Davigness Plan, aspacially in the north and in Lorrence. They were also active among the Ladrocht miners, who, in gote of the government, tried to get cost out of a mace which had been officially described as one which held acrising but 'pebbles. and boulders', and finally broke through the Ladrecht wall and found. a pit which contained no less then eight million tons of unthrecite. In July 1980 the leader of the PCF Gord federation displayed the Occurs flag in front of the wall, with the following macripuon. 'This flag probeings the region's reconquest of its wealth.' Another manifigure PCF involvement occurred at Saint-Brienne, where the workers of the multi-purpose firm of Manufrance managed to stop the closure of their workplace with the help of the Communist surver, Joseph Sanguedolce. In March 1981 after a long industrial, political. and hard battle, a workers' co-corretive was set up to rep Manufrance, the Societé Co-operatore de Production et de Distribution ($COPD). On the PCF's behalf, Marchau hasled all those victorius. and declared. 'No indeed, the employers cannot get the working class. to take the path of class collaboration, they cannot force it to agree to its own exploitation."

Despite its emphasis on 'the poor' and the industrial workers, the PCF made valuate, but only partly successful efforts so robut the charge that it had gone 'workerset'. In particular, it tried to was over the 'intellectuals', by which seem it means all those who used their mental labour, and not just writers, artists, thankers and executats. A substanced number of these intellectuals, both unide and outside the party, were durarhed by the stress on industrial action, by the attacks on "the rich (feeling they were directed at all those who were better off then factory workers), by what they regarded as a tuning down of the party's criticism of the socialist countries' limitations on democracy. and by some of the intest cultural stututed staken by the PUF, which to their signalled a return to past sectionasses. Whether these misgivings were jumified or not, they were certainly emerciased and voiced, as that the leadership had to tackle thom. It did so by convenue a Consoil National (a consultative body on up by the 2 trd congress) at Bobassy in February 1980. The resolution adopted at the morting began by saving that the present crims affected annihormals as much as workers, and at upoke of 'outcome Longwys' by analogy with cities such as Longwy where de-industrialization had led to starnotion and decline. It then went on to secont that the PCF's fight for 'democratic advance' required the participation of all, and finally it dealt with three mouse which were particularly sensitive among smellectuals. The first one was whether the party had given up the sam of left usery, and the snewer was that it had done notions of the surt and that it will wasted usery, including many 'in the top'. The second one was the societies countries. The resolution denied that there had been a toming down of criticism of the 'negative phenomene' which existed there, but it also classed that, despite their serious shortcomings, these countries had abstached exploration and ended illineracy 'watern the space of a saugh generation. The final same was the workersintellectuals alliance. The resultation researched as pursuitable amount times. On those three crimial moses, except purhaps the last one, the document was too neperal to be really convincing.

Two grows where the PCP's policy of 'popular membranest' led to bested controverses were managration and drugs. On immagration, the party's mand was that because France had two malhan unemployed, forther managration should be stopped, as it would only make unamployment werse. However, Communists did not demand the reputration of managrants already in the country, and in fact and they should have the same rights in French workers. On the processed problem of housing, the PCP charged profess and government housing agencies with pursuing the deliberate palacy of concentrating syntagrants in working-closs urous, generally those which had a Communion mayor and council On 5 November 1980, a Polerburtous statement demanded that social assessment to amangrants should come from the government and the employers, and not only from local. councils. The statement expressed its approval of the measures taken. by Community stayors to result the prefets' housing policies and 'to reduce the total value of social significant to strongrants'. Although the party west out of its way to assert that its proposals were designed to combat racess. It was widely accused of semophobia, a charge which was unfounded but which its own materials and decisions position to justify * Of the various pacadents which occurred in relation. to summigrants, the most controversial was the 'Vitry incident'. At the end of Ducamber 1980, some three hundred Malan workers were transferred from their hostel in the middle-class town of Saint-Maur. to a hostel in nearby Viery, a working-class town run by a Communist. spayor, Paul Mercieca. The latter had not been informed, and when he was told what had happened, he tried to talk to the Mahan workers. and urns them to demand accommodation in Soint-Maint, where most of them worked. The intervention of a Main emberry official prevented hits from useing the workers, and soon afterwards some Vitry tohobitants, including a few Community, decided to take the law into their own hands. They used a mechanical digger to destroy the gates leading to the hostel and cut off its water, gas and electricity supply L'Humanité, m ats 3 January 1981 none, described their action at 'deplorable' and musted that the PCF mayor had had no part in it. It is probable that a number of Viery demonstrators were recess and did not support their mayor for any nobler motive than short-aghead self-inverest, and in view of this, the PCF ought to have been more forceful in its condemnation of their 'respectable excesses' and its expression its opposition to mobilew

The PC Fu stand on drugs also aroused heated debutes. The Communists claimed that their companys against drugs was aimed at the traffickers, who made money by exploiting other people's weaknesses, and at the regime, which had nothing to offer its youth but intemployment and cynicism. Their opposition to drugs was summed up in the dogan, La drogue me, manicla drogue (Drugs bill, bit in kill drugs). On the practical side, in conformity with the 33rd congress approach, they called upon ordinary people to expose drug pediars themselves on the ground that the authorities often turned a bland eye and did not prosecute the offenders. This lad to a number of incidents, of which the most famous occurred an February 1981, at Montagay, where the PCF moyor, Robert Hue, led a demonstration of local citizens outside the bouse of a Moroccan who was suspected of being a drug podlar. Once again, the purry was accused of blorant 'tecom' and of fevouring such law I. Marchan conferred that the PCF had raised the mass in the Wrong Woy'

A final currengement of the aged congress concerned the party study and the need to accompanies it in order to make it more effective. At the and at 1980 the combination had grown to 709,000, a figure which (Arfades 90,700 pew recruits, but does not show how many people helt. * These describing this croud is appropriately, the leadership was minimum to increase the number of factory cells and make them more active. It was once much successful in both respects. With regard to internal denotation, it is difficult to enquiring their pumber, once no foreign are evaluable at the time of westma, but there is letter doubt that they continued to be outspeaked, mostly in the Parm area and among intellectuals. For emmote, in 1979 the former Paris district secretary, Henry Pointers, range and from the C.C., and so May suits, tegether with François Hincher, he founded Rencontrol Communicates, a group made up of PLF denotate and a few orthors. Position and Huncher were eventually expected in October, although the C.C. a formulation was that they 'had put the quelves outside the party'. Income they had gestimbed their cytocrams in the "bourgoose press" instead of the party process and that the incretional had shall easted the fact, the foundary of Rencombree Communication are no longer anomhers of the Party 19

October 1981). Another sign of discontent was the creation by Socialist and Communiar intellectuals of Union door les latter, a body which set smell the sum of restoring left unity at the top and did not take up the PCF's was that the PS had 'shifted to the right'. In 1981, two prominent critics were expelled: Elleinstein, who had 'put liminal outside the party', and limibar, who was successorable to Athanor, because at the and of 1980 he accused himself of having strangled his wafe in a fit of narrows depression, and was subsequently decaused at the Samte-Amer informary. (The official enquiry ended with a new-love, i.e. with the conclusion that there were no grounds for prosocution.) However, in November 1980 Republican called him 's colleague, a friend and a contrade' and described the press stracks on him as the latest example of 'the manhametable baseness of national Community.'

The suft elections

En October 1980 the PCP National Conference decided to put up a Communist candidate for the April 1981 presidential election. Georges Marchan. It was the first time that the party had taken such a step, since in 1964 and in 1974 at had supported the stagle condidate of the left, Mirrerrand, and in 1969 it had only agreed to let Duclos stand became the Socialists had refused a joint candidate. The decision was therefore a clear aga - and it was presented as such - that the PCP thought at land burn, wrong up the past to effect stock behand a Socialist and had streff encouraged the view that Community may be good at building unity but have no further independent role to play once it is achieved, especially as there is no likelishood that a Communist would become prendent, given the existing political attention in France But had that amustion changed in 1980? The PCF leadership did not think so and it frankly admitted that the object of the energies will to secure a sufficiently bush number of votes in the first ballot to compel a victorious Matternaid to form a Socialist-Communist conlistion and amplement far-reaching reforms. The party frequently quoted the trying. An promier tour on chouse, an second tour on simula (in the first totald you choose, in the second round you channate), in order to show why a vote for Marchau would not be wasted: it would show which policy people really liked, even if that policy stood little chance of communities universy support at the second basics. At that second hallot, the party added, people would then vote for the policy they distilled least, knowing that the final winner could not inners their wishes. One should note in passing that the Community were not the only once who tried to exploit the two-ballot system in this way, because the Gaullest leader, Charac, passified his own candidacy on the some grounds as Marchan, i.e. by saving that woses for houself would compel Guerré d'hotains to take sato account the views which Gualbuts advocated. The decision to street a Communist candidate was described by the PCF leadership as an application of the 23rd congress tactic of building upsty step by step through a series of battles. The prendental cumpage was used to be one, but only one, of these bertles us the course of which the party 'mobilised the masses' Unfortugately for the PCF, a lot of ordinary pupole who lack the Community' political sophistication could not understand how granding against a Socialist was a step sowards unity, and they concluded that the party had turned its back on unity and wanted to go it alone. Some even thought it was quite right to do so! Such an assessment was associated for the mesole reseon that Marchau's frequent remaders that there was no 'some strategy' apart from that's correspended to the truth: there was no other way for French Community ever to come man to power except through the pluralistic road adopted at the 22nd and 2 trd congresses. Whether the factics used to apply such a strategy were sound and easily understood is another Star Red

Another reason put forward by the PCF leadership to account for its decimen was that acculants was now on the agenda, not in the versuthat it could be achieved overagelit but in the sense that there was no way out of the creas union processal reforms were emplemented with the sum of making decisive incords into carritalism. Hence the need to show the people that what was at stake in the presidential election was an choix do sociésé, a choice for the right kind of society. Significuntly, an addrson to Marchau, all the other candidates were agreed. that the French were called upon to make such a choice. Gueard and Charac made at quate clear that the society they wassed was present anciety, perhaps sustably amended, a society based on economic and political liberations. For his part, Marchais was aqually clear about the hand of menery he advocated, one in which capitalist profits would be structly checked as a prejude to their final abotition. The same clarity could not be found in Mitterrand's statements, as he was obviously trying to appeal to middle-of the-road voters as well as to left wingers.

Marchan conducted a vigorous campaign. From the start he described humself as the 'east-Guessed conduders', thus amplying that he was against the right and was different from the social-democratic left. He further classed that a vote for has was a vote for a policy which required more than voting, action. In order to emphasize this point he presented, act a programme but what he called a Pion do Author, as the form of 131 proposals for which people were asked to fight. This Plac included four objectives - full employment, 'a fairet tocsety' (with better wasm and conditions and a wealth tax), liberty, and greater exportenities for weath - and three moute to achieve them - because home industry (Producty françois), a peaceful foreign policy, and grest democratic reforms (nationalisation of lary monopolies, decentralisation, capital tax, and democratic planame). Throughout the cameaum both Marchas and the party work rather cages about Communiar spacersons at the second bullet if the resport was fought between Guessel and Muterrand, and Piterman even declared that the same 'dad not arms'. But it obviously did in the minds of many voters, so that just a month before the election, so Marchaia was being incorviewed on TV, he finally decided to tackle it. After saying that he would never vote for Concard and that he would rather not have to abstain, he did not rule out voting for Metterrand, but added that the only way of wardens off the 'decase' of a PS-racht condition was to vote for himself at the first ballot. At unknod commenesor manaphrased this air. Vote for Marchaus if you went Mitterrand. Actually, it mucht have been fairer to smead the formulation and any that the Communist massage was. Vote for Marchan if you want Matterrand to be a good president. At one stage during the interview, the PCF leader was asked why his party was willing to govern with the Sociolists although they had 'shafted to the right'. He neve a broad smale and exclassed: 'But to shaft those back to the left, of course! Elementary, my dear Watson!" It was a wetty reserved, but whether it conveneed many viewers that the party was right to attack the Socialists and at the same time repeatedly demand the inclusion of Communist managers in a left wing government is not known.

A week before Marchen's TV interview, a report appeared in Provide in which the paper's Paris correspondent found some nace things to my about General's foreign policy, although he reminded his readers that his party, the UDF, was a coalmoss of 'bourgoos parties' Le Quaridien de Paris corned the handling that 'Breschney votes for General', and Le Monde quierted on its front page that 'Provide draws up a "globally positive halance-short" of General d'Escang's activity' (14 March 1981). The following day L'Humanité denounced what it called Le Monde's 'forgery' on the ground that the phrase 'globally positive balance-sheet' which Le Monde had printed in inverted commes could not be found in the Pravda article. (Le Monde subsequently conceded the point and blamed its Moscow correspondent for this 'regrettable error'.) As for Marchais, he took this opportunity to assert that the views of a Soviet newspaper correspondent were his own affair and in no way represented those of the PCP, which was 'independent of the CPSU in every respect and in every way'.

The hopes of a massive PCF vote were shattered when Marchaus got only 15.3 per cent of the poll at the 26 April first ballot. The full results were as follows:

		Percentage of
	Vales	votes cast
Giscard d'Estaing (UDF)	8,222,431	28.31
Minerrand (PS)	7,505,960	25.84
Chirac (RPR)	5,225,846	17.99
Marchau (PCF)	4,456,923	15 34
Laloude (Ecologue)	1,126,254	3.87
Arlette Lagualler (Trutakyist)	668,057	2 30
Crépeau (MRG)	642,777	2.21
Debré (Independent Gaullist)	481,821	1.65
Marie-Prance Garand (as above)	386,623	E 33
Huguette Bouchardeau (PSU)	321,344	1 10
		Percentage of electorate
Abstentions	6,882,777	18.90
Spoilt ballot papers	478,046	1 31

All observers were surprised by the PCF candidate's poor acore, partly because opinion polis had credited him with 18 or 19 per cent, and partly because all his campaign meetings had been very well attended. An immediate explanation, accepted by Communists and non-Communists, was Peffet Chirac, i.e. the widespread belief, encouraged by the media, that the second-ballot contest might be fought out between Giscard and Chirac. PCF spokesmen asserted they had received 'hundreds of letters' from people who said they had voted for Mitterrand just so as to prevent a final contest between two right-wingers. But the 'Chirac effect' cannot wholly account for such a serious Communist reversal.

To say that PCF members were stunged would be an understate-

With, arrecally as they had been expectedly told that 14 per cost was the sen of both Gocord and Mitterrand to 'margonalise' the party And now 15 per cent was the figure they had to put up with. It must be said, however, that as far as outsiders can rudge, it does not look as if the intense disappointment led to despondent apathy: meetings held to discuss the results were packed and lively. As for the CC, it met on 38 April and heard a report from Charles Faterman. He premised a fuller malyes in due course, and provisionally not forward three hypotheses - the beisef that Munerrand alone assured capable of besting Gueard, the slow start of the electoral campaign, and the virulence of anti-Communist attacks from all quarters. Filterism also magnited that the party was powers the price for not having presented a candidute in previous electrons, a self-critical apparent that the PCF press. has been developing ever since. Finally, he got the CC to endorse measurementy the Pointburgon's view that Communicat veters should be terned to support Mutterrand at the second ballot, as nothing ought to be neglected to bring about a right-wing defeat.

The commonest view among non-Communists was expressed by Lily Marcon who wrote in Le Monde, 30 April 1081, that the PCF's actback was 'the pepalty' it had had to pay for having given up Eurocommunion in fever of the mirrower 23rd congress line. It is an interesting view, but there is no evidence to show that French voters really knew the difference between the two hase. Interestingly, Le-Mondo's editorial of the day before had asserted that, sudging from the fortunes of other western CPs, 'Marxist-Lemmat orthodoxy, loyalty to Mescow or otherwise, have loss weight then is generally believed at local level. In the mose more, the paper's odstor, Fauvat, wondered if the results did not show that the Communist electorate was more attached to mosty than the party leadership. Another intersuring bypothesis. But perhaps to concentrate on the PC.P's stratugy and its amount in to remain on the surface and not to approciate the social sugarficance of the election results. Most of the tacsal stress set in motion by the May 1966 events as well as a section of the working class were drawn sowerds run hands of 'reformans' bucause of their discourses with the effects of the cruss on themselves - the safe 'reformant' of Charac, which promised greater streamen to mend improvements whilst feaving the basis of existing society untouched, and the more dynamic 'reformann' of Mitterrand, which professed for-reaching reforms, but short of the 'collectivism' which the Courfunction were allegadly preaching. Because these secul excuses were reference rather than sevelutionary, the 'veal change' advocated by the PCF mound see reducal and see frightening. All the seems, these sections engerly wanted change'—the want that sun an armely everybody's lops, from the constitution to the electure - and that may well explains why in many as 7s per cent of those who cost their vote had resected Guicard. It may also explain why it was comparatively easy for many of the supporters of Guidion 'retormism' to both social-dissocratic 'retormism' at the second ballet and give Memoriated a retormising victory.

For an 40 May it was announced that after tweety three years' unmarraped right wing provincest, Proace had at last elected a men of the left, Francon Metterrand. Final remits gave him. $5,714,498 votes: 51.76 per mass and Conned 14,847,187 votes 148.84 per cent. Debraves calebrations took place at the Place de la Bostshie and throughout Prance. The PC F wanted to share to the toy, and did an with the feeling that its own contribution had been "decisive", an enumerate which few observers disputed because the purty's cathpoint in support of Microward had not locked authorism and because meety all of Marchau's first bullet supporters synchol over to Matterread at the second ballet. Marrover, some of Matterread's highest source deve achieved in areas where the PCF had dust someeasily well on at April. Thus, in seven departurement (Aude, Arthur, Some Saint Denis, Nativec, Houte-Vienne, Haute-Garvane, and Hautes-Pertuases where Matterraph got over 60 per cour of the votes cost, Marchait had pulled over 50 per cent (37 3 per cent in Srine-Sourt Denns and $4.3 per cour to House-Vienne). The same trend was nomenable to but more where the PCF was strong, such as Nimes, America, South Expenses, to measure only a few

On 15 May the C.C. hand a report from Marchae. He confirmed the party's assessment of the occord-bullet result as 'the vectory of hope', which was L'Hamanste's headbar on the roth. That vectory, he said, had enhand its a straighter which was 'naprocedeneed' and 'compley'. On the one band, the desire for change was obvious, but on the other hand, it was equally obvious that the strong desire had adapted concern for the custom of change. As for the PCP, it would support any step forward, which was topogramate to asying that some change was better than an change at all. Marchaes then referred to the party's immediate tasks – improving its activity by taking greater account of the specific means of all the categories a back constitute at , proparing 'to the deventy of all the categories a back constitute at , proparing itself for the legislative electrons, and negotiating with the PS. With regard to the last point, he mid that the PCF's own proposition, embedded in his Plan de Index, remeated valid, but as a long-term nam. Agreement chould be cought with the Sacialists on less reducing memployment, boosting production, democratization, and as independent foreign policy. The man was moderate and concileatory, and at no time did the PCF lander speak of 'conditions'.

The 'complex' character of the situation referred to by Marchais lay in the fact that the PCF was now part of a left wing majority – for the first time since the Laboration – and yet had metamed a major electional serbock. In order to regain its infloence, it decided, as usual, to step up its activity as 'the mass movement', not in order to appose the new government, but to ensure that it would carry out its piedge of making life better for the people, especially the poorest sections. In Riesdamen a Polithurana member, Guy Hermar, asserted that Communities were 'ready to po as far and as fast as the working people want' (19–2) May 1981), and an editorial in L'Humanesse declared 'What is needed today to that we should put correlives at the service of the popular movement, which remains declare — ' (16 May 1981). The CG T displayed the many 'realizes' in the party, and on its behalf Seguy stated that it would not stage a series of strikes but would seek the satisfaction of its members' demands through negotiation.

As much in the presidential election results were known, Marchala warmly constrainted Matterrand and east that the PCF was 'ready to sesume all its responsibilities, stelluding that of taking part in the government', which was a polite way of myring that there ought to be Communist managers. However, both Managerand and the P3 were unwilling to commit themselves without necuring definite PCP grammans, and they argued that no decinion could be taken until after the General Maxima, which had been called by the new President in the hope of pursues a left-wine parlamentary majority. Talks between the two parties did take place before the first ballot, due to be held on 14 Pariet, and also between bullets to discuss startual descriptions in although the PC. If were out of go way to be cancellatory, and although a number of 'convergences' were noted, nothing like a custimon government programme true agoed, and no promise true given to let the Community have manutarial powe. The results of the first ballet were so follows.

There were 1 96 deputies elected at the first ballot (because they got an absolute majority), of whom seven only were Communists. The great wanner was the PS, 'the President's party', and the great lover was the right. The very high number of absentions was partly due to the weather (it had been a beautiful sunny day) and partly to the feeling of many voters that one electoral contest in any given summer was enough. As for the PCP, although it slightly improved its percentage by comparison with the presidential election, its total number of votes dropped a little. One of the reasons put forward was that a substantial number of those who had voted Communist in the past, because the PCP was 'the party of change', now turned to the Socialists, whose party had become the party of realistic change.

The second ballot was held on 21 June in the 334 constituencies in which no candidate had obtained an absolute majority the week before. The results were: left, 10,617,917 (56.8 per cent of the votes cast); right, $,083,192 (43.2 per cent). The total percentages in all constituencies won by the left were: PGP, 59.4 per cent, right, 40.6 per cent; PS, 56.3 per cent, right 43.7 per cent. In the new assembly, the Socialists had 269 seats (an absolute majority), the PCF 44 (-42), the MRG 14 (+4), other left 6 (+5), the RPR $5 (-70), the UDF 62 (-57) and other right 11 (-3).

Following the elections the PCF and the PS met again, and after long talks, they finally signed an agreement on the basis of which four Communist ministers entered the government headed by Pierre

Maurov. It was trunce that one of the party's fondest densite - returnmay to the preverament after a therty four year absence - come true at a time when it had instanced its fourth electrical arthurit. It was even more stance and perhaps the betterest pull to emailors; that it had been made possible, not in a result of 'popular pressure on the P.S. but, if goything, as a result of 'popular premary'. 'the variet of unregraph suffrage con the PCF stool. The four Communica measures were Charten Futerman, who as addition to being given the most of Manater of Transport, was also made Manater of state, 14 our of the PM s. close advisers. Although the PCF ensured that these were exported posts and that Communist maniturn were der menustres à part surriers, a e-that they had the name rights as other manuters, this was not the view of other prominent members of the government, one of whom inclinally referred to has PC F colleagues as errand how? This of course, may have been und to pacify the American government, which had openly expressed its magazings. The truth is wester was but the posts were and obteats monor pushe, cut uses the mere a evence. It is not not to un-field processional gave the party some prestage and against a vity

Among the recents in the Pt. 3. Ps agreement there was the presign to improve the act of the worst off-gradually and according to the stars of the economy, the pentium to reduce the working weak, extend the public sector, democratize political life, and lounch a two-year plan against unemployment and for aconomic growth, and family, the commitment of both parties to the autostaneous demoletion of all moleculy blocs, to the reduction of armaments in Purope, to negotiations on the presence of Saviet 5.550 manufer and the installation of Asterican Pevalung amoules, and to the withdrawal of Saviet tricipalization on Augmentum and an end to all outside interference. It was the unition on larger policy which attracted most attention and led some aborywers in aposit of the Communicate total agreement. Continuously propagated presented matters differently and negoted that on Alighanistan for example, the Pt. F. had always advocated the withdrawal of Soviet troops, provided there was no outside interference.

and it pointed out that the joint agreement did in fact mention both points. The PCP also und that the two parties did not need to have the unite inscrincial of the origin of the Afghan cross in order to agree about the role that the Prench government could play towards its indution, in other words, they could not pointly towards accurring a political artifement which would have to the withdrawel of Soviet troops, even if one side believed they should never have gone in in the first place, and the other justified their intervention. A againfante part of the agreement was the reference to the 'unbroken' government solidarity expected from the againstories (some solidarité some faille) although the statement went on to my that each party remained attached to 'to own personality' and its own 'fundamental positions'.

The PCF-PS surrement of June 1981 was much milder than the terra Common Programme, let alone ets 1977 'undeted' version demanded by the Communists. Why then did the PCF man it? The answer seems obvious: taking part in the government was at that price. But the explanation unmediately raises a stamber of questions: Did the party went to be in the government, and why? Did not the landership know that Martiegrand's may was to have the Contaminants as imany purtners the better to domeaste them and check them? What did the Commission themselves have to gon from being associated with incurarce which they described - and commune to describe at the time of writine - us imufficient? Many wild guesses are possible and have indeed been made, but the party's own explanation was straightforward enough. It was that nervered suffrage had spoken and its verdect had to be respected. One may take this or face value, not pecessarily because one believes in the PCP's democratic uncersity. but because the alternative to accepting the purple's verdict would have hum to confine the party to startle appointion. Of course, the hinders know about Matteryand's strategy - he had never traid to lade it - but they took the view that they could accept his challenge, buctones at was not a foregoing conclusion that the Communiar presence in the government would 'marginalise' the party; is could well have the opposite effect. As for the fact that Matterrand's accommune dad not go for enough, it was nevertheless true that it was a 'men forward'. and Mary had said long ago that every map forward is 'more important then a down programmes' it is tempong to my that the PCF availanced ats pride and to ducture with Le Commit Enchains that it was in power all right, but in the power of the Socialists (Let PG du position . . . der secuelaties), but that would not be a fully accurate description of the position. Pleat, because PC F departus retained the right to make constructive errorsions' of the government, just blue that PS colleagues – a point which the PC F press was not slow in structing, and occordly buctors of the porty's involvement in 'most organizations' such as the CGT. The CGT, of course is not bound by any solutional same faille with the predominantly Socialist povernment, and although it has expressed its vollingaries to comperate with it, it has also made it clear that it would prove for bolder measures in and when required. This both the PCF and the CGT intended to reteat their right of criticism and even id mid direct from government decreases was demonstrated by the acth congrues and above all by the first these years of PCF measurement participation.

The aith congress (February 1984)

The pre-congress discussing was associated in October 1981 when the CC published a deaft quartition and called on the membership to debate it in their party upots cells, sections and districts as well as through the columns of L'Humanier. Of the former discussion on outsider is naturally not in a position to have accurate knowledge, and all that can be entery asserted, sportly on the basis of voting futures and reports published as the decisional and regional party press, is that these tion arithm a massive rank-and-file revels nor a sheep-like endorusment of the leadership's views. At the congress smelf, Guy Hermier's report revenied that $6 cells out of $7.541, and 5 sections out of $2000. had resocted the CC's test, and that out of the 20,414 delegates who attended dutrict conferences, 20,179 had expourted the deaft sensfurnor, 242 had obstanted and 94 had voted against at 4 Other reports show that, although at all levels of the purty the votes in favour expresented a submanual asportly, unananaly was the inceptant further than the rule. It is quiforturnibly sugarantite to be more process. on this same became of the videoproud weakency (norther opposed nor condemand by the landarshap to send homogeneous delegations from such district, with the result that managery worst were seidout votend at the congrues. Our netable exception was the House Coronne district, which elected a decedent, Depot Compay, in our of its deligates. In his congrues against, Largery disclored that he would abstrate in the final vote and he empressed the wish that in future other purry man would follow the enample of his own district. * Equally manuficput is the fact that, according to Hermore, 465 amendments to the druft resolution were astronomed by district conferences, and 1,544 by individual members or lower party users. Out of this total, 241 amendments were adopted by Congress.16

In the two-month discussion in L'Humanni 11 the chief contentions issue was the unalysis of the party's electoral authoric Breadly speaking, there were two treads, with a minority taking the view that the trouble loy with the 'inclurion policies' of the 1977-81 period (especially the attacks on the Socialists), and a majority agreeing with the leadership that the 'minor matakes' of that period were less important then the party's slow response, from 1954 onwards, to the great changes which had taken place in French society, especially the fact that most French men and women had become 'estarted workers'. its believed working out of an ammediate strategy of acceptat advance. wholly based on French realities, and its insufficient stress on its own distinctive identity. With regard to the difference between 1977 and 1981, one contributor. Michel Turelly, under the point that if the PCF had agreed to a bowdlerised Common Programme in 1977 it would have become the princees of each a limited programme and would not have been able to advacate 'real change' without appearing to betray unity. He added that it was mutuken to describe the 1981 PCF-PS. agreement so "less advanced" than the 1972 Common Programme because the latter was a comprehensive pre-election piedee to carry our a number of reforms, whereas the former was merely the postelection acknowledgement of what the two againtories assessed as the recently expressed people's will. The June 1981 agreement, he singrand, did not compart either party to specific figures and deadlance and thus left each of them free to computes for its own ideas, always taking cure not to be too for ahead of gopular consciousness. Such a View course to be that of the landershap, as at now believen that it is not agreements between the PCF and the P5 which are obsolete, but the concept of a government programme which precedes the 'mass movement' material of reflecting, step by step, the level it has reached.

The arth congress began on 3 February 1982 with a five-hour speech by Marchan. After an introduction which developed the now familiar thems of le reservé de 1956 and its consequences, he presented his remarks under four headings, first, the party's understanding of 'necessisme à la française' (a society based on justice, new acconsist growth, freedom and a cultural remainings), tocouldy, an analysis of 'how and with whom to advance' (how by extending democracy and trugging the class struggie; with whom the working class, the compleyers, the intellectuals, the formers, women and youth, in other words, 'the everwhelmon majority of the people'), thirdly, m. incomment of the international intention (in which the speaker irresped the apparance of the struggle for peace and resmerted the PCP's "solidance with Communist portion to power", a unladerity which did not preclude cruscum), and finally, a section of the role of the purty and the need to give 'another distression, a new style to [sta] mass work". It was in the second section that Marchais moke of the PC P's stand since 10 May 1981. He stated that Communicate welcomed the seeps already taken by the government, but he did not lade the fact that across problems, such as unconcloyment, safleton and fack of democracy, within and outside the workplace', were will awaiting anisotropic. He summed up the PCF's activade by quoting what he himself had said in his Ducember 1981 CC scouch. 'Not so much to describer, but to explain, not so much to criticine, but to propour, and not early to explain and propens, but to build, to achieve, to accompisch, to impresent - today, that as, to all fields, the Communists' erudom role."12

The Resolution adopted by the 24th congress was divided into three marcs. The first one dealt with the 'lessons to be drawn from the list decades. It moke of a 'new historical ero', both for France and for the world, and stressed that 'for the first tune in France, socialism is on the menda, not as a distant and consequently obstract prospect, but so the concrete answer called for by our succety's pressing problems'. Whilst restreating the point that the PCF had lagged behind in definme its strategy of 'democratic socialist advance', it added the provise that the delay, serious though it was, did not mean that the party had been period by and left in the wilderness. The twenty-old years more 1956 were not 'married years', despute the fact that French Communinote could have displayed greater enalytical depth and boider matintives. The second section, entitled. Somehors for France', oucr again described the PCP's sam as 'democratic, self managing accusion', and once seem mented that such as not fully took into account French realities, the resisties of the crisis, and international resisties. The last part of this metten, 'Democratic advance today', outlined the party's search to the present 'unprecedented setuntion' by mying that here exportunates, had armed since May 1981 and that it was by 80 ments a formular conclusion that Matterrand's victory would lead to 'a nocusi-democratic experiment. To as possible to amplement another policy than that of managing the crisis at the apteriors of big business." What was accided, the resolution stand, was the people's own involvement at every stage of the battle, for the class struggle did not come to us end on 10 May'. The PCF was determined to wage this struggle, not against the government, but as part of the new left majority. In the final section of the resolution, all Communists were called upon to develop a 'new political practice', which involved listening to working people's demands and workers, showing in practice that they belonged to a party which was at the same time 's party of struggle and a party of government', and doing everything in their power to 'improve and enrich' the party's democratic life 15

As usual at a PCF congress, the number of foreign delegations was very bush ~ $12 m all, mostly from Communist parties, but some from national-liberation movements. Observers noted that aspecially wants applicate arrested the Soviet and Polish delegations, and also that for the first time since the 1960s, the Chinese Communist Purty was represented 14 Elections to the party's leading bodies produced no surprises. The CC was made up of 145 members, of whom twelve were new, the Polisbureau of twenty-two members, of whom two were new (both of them active CGT tuncensts), and the accretariat of seven members, of whom one was new. As expected, Fiterman remained on the secretarist descrite having become a government gunister, and Georges Marchan was re-elected to the post of General Secretary. In has closure speech the latter warned the mehr that their hopes of dividing the left would be disappointed because the PCF and the PS. although different, could and would contains to work together in amplementing the policies for which the French people had voted.

The first these years of PCF government participation (1983-4)

This final section should be seen as a postscript which is mostly contemporaneous with the events it relates and documes. More than any part of the present chapter, it is bound so be incomplete and provisional – incomplete, because the story is still going on and will not obligangly stop when these pages are ready to go to press; provisional, because the full agnificance of the period cannot be properly grasped until a little shore water has flown under the bridge. The outhor's only prantication for not mopping at the 24th congress is that subsequent developments have shown both the achievements and the difficulties of the left in power and have raised in a new way the issue of the PCP's role in France's political life.

The left government's more emportant achievements are in the field of home policy. In the first two years of to life, it was able to check the tion of agreement and and of Harterson's early manuage was the crumon of 200,000 new jobs to the Cert Service. However, the position compares by here determined, so that up April 1984 the Prime Manner forecast 1.4 malon manufoyed by the end of the year, & farms which was challenged by the U.G. Tapel Force Outrains, both of which quity of a promitir 3 militim. Agent from utgang the poverymany to each more represely the two problems of increased production and lower immaginyment, the PCF also called up the truckers the market to intervene, both by makes of protest actions and by taking advantage of the new rights they have wan and of the new economismos at their disposal. One are exportantly, for example, is the schools bounched by Jack Rains, the Communist Employment Manager upon March 1 of 1, a or import whereby the state would proved figures at annotance and adoptists training arrangements to these firms Which arresd to supply one quether with the gunds they respectively. required. The Ocyober 1985 usus of the Galvers do Communities discribed such a school as one more tool at the workers' disposal's but it revened that the government could not impour it and that the employers were not likely to many at at, a was therefore up to shop streamle and workshop committees to Suit for it.

Among the posteric measures introduced by the left government, one must measure the abolitime of the double penalty . September 2081), the decrees amued between Japoney and March 1982 which possingly the 10-hour work, five works and handage, retreatment at the age of outy on a larger paneous, a 14 per cent mercan in the management waste SMIC, a twenty served per count sportune to family ellowances, free ghorton, and the provision of youth tracking echomes, the emenues of agreembeaces fremmes three million more workers gate the public metas), the last on decentralisation, which gillows for greater regional autonomy, and the control of inflating. In the light of such a record, the PS and the PC F felt compled to assert in December 1984 that the government's achievements true 'already' enserver to the emportant arens of the Popular Priors and the Laboration.' However, Pt. F propagateds has also stressed that the appear of the changes would be felt only to the extent that the people themselves took advantage of them.

The other side of the man is constituted by the left's electoral withouts as bond electors and by the government's appropriar mon-ness. The first electoral archaels accurred to the March (talk) contound electrons in which the right secured 1,147 costs against 798 for the left, although the gap as terms of votes was much smaller 40,92% for the right and 49 59% for the left). Of course, local electrons frequently tend to favour the Opposition, if only because they provide a reasonabiy safe outlet through which must decoutest with the government this be engreened without seoperchann so chances of narrival. In this respect, the March 1983 cassonal electrons did not come as a sweet purprise; however, after the exphere of the arrevious number, the rishing purtues (PS, PCF and MRG) were enquering simbon, which to not necessarily a land those. On 21 March, the PCF Pointsureau issued a statement which condemned the right-wing's 'distinguist's urged the government to curry out the policies on which it was elected. taking great case that the effect of its referens be 'clearly purcurved by the French people - especially the most under-provileged - in their doly lives', and finally, pledging that the PCF would 'common to groupe all its responsibilities'. Provincir, many PCF members. went a little further and expressed their persons concern, based on expensesce, that 'm their daily lives', the majority of French pouple had not yet felt the brons of a 'somebot' government.

The second electoral setback took place at the March 1983 streamtical electrons. At the first buildt, the Opposition polled searly therees, melhon votes, the left nearly ten million, and the centre left about two methon. (The contro left, or southly contrast, was a new electoral alliance, not unlike the SDP-Liberal alliance in this country) Another warrying feature was that nearly eight mallion people (21.6) per cent of the electorate) abstanced. The arrustion was so serious that on the eve of the encoud ballet, the PS, the PCP, the MRG and the PS U arrand a point appeal arrang abatument to go to the polis. As a result, the Opposition haddide which had been confidently forecast did not merenalise. The right was still ahead of the left by about one maken votes but it did not man control of as many cotes as it had expected. As for the PCF, it lost some of its traditional bestions (including Saint-Etienne, Nimes, Beziers, Saint-Oventin, Arles, Site and Chetico), but it ended with a total of 184 town councils. When the CC met on 19 and 20 April, it proceeded to a detailed analysis of the results and came to the conclusion that, contrary to the class that the PCF had been 'routed', it had in fact made some modest but undensable advances. It posited out, among other though, that the left had 'remand well' where the Communication were group and that it was the PS rather than the PCF which had suffered been (some of their important) at those working-class areas where decontent was highest. This encouraged Marcham to suggest cantiously that, slowly bur surely, the PCF had started to 'clamb back'. Earlier on, after admitting that the party's recovery would 'take a long time and require much effort', he had material: 'We are racing on a deceptively that level, News semines sur an four plant.

One of the unusualists sequels of the menicipal electrons was a government restrictle. The PM drastically curtailed the size of his cabinet from thirty-five to fiftuen. Whilst Friedman and Regons running in the cabinet and hold their former poets, the other PCF grantsters became Secretaries of State outside the cubinet, and Jock Rabte was switched from Health to Employment. The restrictle also strengthened the course-right in the P5 by making the France Manister, Jacques Delors, number two in the cubinet incrurchy. It is worth noting that shortly before the restrictle the lander of the P5 left-way, Jean-Pairre Chevènement, and rungmed from his position in Manister for Industry. It was this new cobinet, described by 40 leader as a 'fighting government', which adopted the moterity measures (which are discussed below) known as the plan de rigness. ¹⁵ To what extent Fiterman and Rigout fought against the plan mode the cubinet chamber we naturally do not know.

Another second of the March 1983 electrons was that us a few areas the battle had to be fought all over again, following capit-tring conplanets that a number of uncreasful left-wingers (mostly Communists). had been guity of 'arrandemust'. Aithough the candidates concerned hotly demed the charges, the complaints were upheld by an educatstrative tribunal and eventually by the Council of East, the sugreme civil court in the land. In the new contests, the PCF lost control in most of the working-class areas, ence part of the famous 'Red Beir' outside Paris, where it had had a mayor (One of them, however, was re-elected.) What was equally worrying, for the left as a whole as wall to for the party, was the number of votes which had none to the fascist Front National, which is an exact replice of the racial National Front in Britain, in areas with a buch proportion of interpersers, (Most of the laster, of course, could not vote, as they were not of French nationality.) For example in the town of Druce the Socialists were busten by a Right-Wine list which included the Goullet RPR and four members of the Front National. This unhalv alteace was condemned by some Goullats, but their leader, Jacques Chirac, appeared to condone it after the event." The PCF comment was that the Opposition would stop at nothing to undermose the government, including the explosistion of racial antagonisms.

Of the hersh measures taken by the government, the most important to date are the three devaluances made Matternand came to power, the March 1983 plan of regions and the March 1984 steel pine. The three devaluations excurred in October 1081, in June 1082. and in March 1983. According to the PCF and some other leftwragers, they were dictated by the LMP and accepted by Prance without a fight. The plan de regions was broached on 25 March 1983. Its general sum was stud to be the curbing of inflation and the cutting of the foreign trade deficit, and in order to achieve thin usin, the government amposed higher traces at increased rail faces, telephone, gus and electricity charges, and the price of alcohol and tobacco; and it set a limit to the amount of cash which may be taken out of the country. (about £180 per person). The adoption of this plan was bound to put a great stress on PCF-P5 relations. The Commission had to display great skill in order to extreme the measure (both because they manipely disapproved of it and became the unions' reaction had been hostile), whilst, at the same tune, taking great care not to destroy left. unity. The criticism was expressed by Marchais, who declared that the PCF was not against 'rigour' pay ay, but went on so define the word as arvolving the resection of austerity, thus implying that the government's memorie were not a serious, regovern way of tackling the country's economic problems. The request which Community wanted, he added, was the strict measurement of the economy, see which took into account existing realities as well as the people't long-term much and interests. The PCF put forward sharmative proposals and called on the working people to do their unmost to make the government change course. In Parliament, P.C.F deputies tabled. five amendments to the plan, and André Lasoune, the leader of the group in the National Amembly, demanded an early meeting with the Prime Minister After a long discussion, Mauroy made a few conconsons, one of them not unamportant (encounting the lower said from the additional 1 per cent tax) and pledged that the PCF's other proposals would be 'borne in mind'. The PCF deputies then agreed to vote for the government, whilst reserving the right to table some of their amendments later. Turbayeally, the Communicate were not called moon to vote for the plan de regimer as such but for a bill allowing the government to inme decrees to amplement parts of the plan.

The months which followed the plan de requeer widewed the gap between the government and the working people, and on the 24 January 1984 The Times Para correspondent reported that Yarmers, civil earwage, mechworkers, masors, chapverd workers, Communists and parents of puzzle (were) all up as urms over their versous ansvances. But the hardest blow came when the government announced its steel plan at the end of March 1984. Its sate was the restructuring of the meel industry (nationsheed mace 1982) to ensure that, in complanes with EEC decisions, it would receive up further subudits. after 1987. Other areas already affected by the implementation of EEC pouces included the car industry, textiles, shipbuilding, coal. and agraculture, but the stack plan was especially drastic stace it involved the chouse of many plants, month in Lorrane, and the loss of some 20,000 sobs. Therey believe france would be severed between 1984 and 1987, but after that date the steel industry would have to stand on its own feet. In order to sweeten the pull somewhat, Matterrand pledged that those who became redundant would qualify either for early retirement or for a two-year retraining.

Housisty to the steel plan was immediately vasced by the main. mesons and by the PCP. On the latter's behalf, Marchaes complained that it was 'precisely the ultra-modern places which (ware) some to be destroyed", and he added that his party, being 'synclutely as favour of modernmention', advocated the only road which could lead to it, viz the creation of jobs coupled with 'a policy of growth suck so the left promised to carry out. The PCF also decided to support the mostworkers' murch on Parse which took place on 13 April by weeding a used token deleastion, headed by Marchan, whilst claiming to respect the predominantly trade usion character of the demonstration. On the same day Philippe Hernog published the party's counter-plan in L'Humanaté. He classed that souted co-operation. arbone all industries and between the government and the firms could leed to keeping steelworkers in employment, to an increase in steel production up to 31 makes topper in two years, and to the creation of new jobs. As for the money sequered to implement the proposed policy of growth and jobs, he suggested at should come from the industrialists (through times on imports, for extende), from astronal and regional banks, and finally from the thirty billion france abreedy corrected for the steel industry by the government all the more to times the Socialists had been showing their importance. for some time. For example, at those October 1983 congrues they demanded from the PCF that it should match its words with its deads. and count entering a government at which it classed it would be stay. A few weeks inter, they made the more point at the soint meeting. of the PS and the PCF, which had ceremibly been convened on 1 December 1981 in order to review the neverament's two-and-a-half year record. In the end, the two parties decided to set up working greate and they haved a joint declaration. The latter was welcomed by the Socialism because it acknowledged the fact that unformeen difficulties had arisen mace 1981, but it was also welcomed by the Community because it researced the need to pursue the pointy of change leanched by the left, it is as the aution of such compromes documents that each rule can arrests them when new differences arres, and then a undeed what has seened in April 1984. The Socielate insusted that their partners, having sugged the Ducamber agreement, were not morelly estatled to attack the steel plan, and they laid great stress on the paragraph which assured that the worsesage of the crisis had 'led the government of the left, on page of monordisane the whole of its action, to show an determination to make the estuation by taking a paramber of regardes steps, der messeur de regione". The Communists replied that the joint assessest nowhere mentioned closures and redundancies, but did in fact supulate the sun of malone 'mentionet activations in such important areas as growth, employment and facul funtion. In his 18 April press conference Marchaia declared that the PCF government participation was not 'uncondended,' but rested on a clearly defined policy. He masked that if the government took steps Which made the carrying out of this policy impossible, then it was they Who put themselves in an endefensible position, not those Who issued. warmings and put forward alternative processis. Marchael also defended the PCF practice of trying to savolve the workers on the grounds that popular granvennes was crucial against 'the violets' officiarys of the right and the applicates, that ducuming the heat way forward with the workers are agreed hance the left, and that convolting the people was the emence of democracy. The Sectation remoted adement and they demanded a 'clarification' of the PCF's position. After consulting with Mitterrand, Menroy decided that the best way of actoryons such a clarification was for his government to sock a vote of confidence in Parlament, hoping that this would drive the Commonate and a corner if they voted for ham, they could hardly as on.

The PCP's openly crutical stand on the most plan was bound to rame rether sharply the same of its continued presence in the government.

exiticating him; if they voted against him or abstained, their minuters would have to go.

This, at any rate, was the PS thinking behind the move. As it Improved, the vote of confidence was duly moved on 20 April, but as Maurov had asked for an endorsement of his sensual policy rather then of the steel plan as such , although he made st clear in his execch. that the plan was these to stay). Community departm voted for the povernment whilst continuous to exceen their reservations and concern. So, nothing was really clarified, or rather the so-called 'clarification) did not take the form mounded by the Socialists. It was rather the Communion who claimed that they had made things crystal clear by properties their communent to left unity and to the government's broad obsectives, and at the more time their mela to put forward their ews proposals for the amplementation of such same. Although the government and the PS were alad to have occured the PCF's parksmentary support, they immediately possed out that the party was incommetent and that its words contradicted its ware. The Communists resected the charge. They said that they wented to contribute to the necessary debate seather the left, that they concern and congressoms were chared by multions who had voted for the left and still wanted it to succeed, and that all they were demanding was that the government should consult the workers before committees itself. To the comshort that the PCF had one foot made the calmost and one foot outside, they replied with their own formule. To the government and with the workers', adding that there was no contradiction between the two because a left-wine government as powerless without the working propin's expense, rest or a regist-want poverament coucks the backung of the employers and the bankers. Family, such regard to the Comtounist presence at the 14 April demonstration, they claimed that it was not heatile to the government for the maple season that the demonstration healf was not describe assess Managemed, but was rather a perfectly legitimate attempt to put pressure on him. And the PCP press repeatedly drew a parallel between the stockworkers' march and the 25 April demonstrations which took piece throughout France to domand a revision of the government's bill which provides for local authorities' financial mentiones to Catholic schools: at those demonstrations, together with a score of secular evantuations, the Socialist party was officially represented, and yet no one accused it of being disloyed to the agreement!

The preceding account should have revealed that three years after joining the government (for ressons abready examined) the PCF is strik assesses to be part of it. Why? In order to answer this question, let us began with the case which much: be made out action continued participating. It would gelade Michardad's shift to the right, or as the Fenencial Tensor put it on 26 April 1984, the fact that he has shad has Martint can . . . and has absorbed much fror market resonant's his openly Atlanticus; and pre-EEC foreign policy; the fact that the PCF prevenueut presunce has not paid off electorally; and finally, the charge pur forward by some rigid Mariness that participation in a 'social-democratic' government is unpracticated. The PCF leadership rejects oil these objections. First, without denying Mitterrand's shift to the right (though it never account has of this crime or or many words), it running convinced that the trend is not irreversible, partly because 'free marker' policies are bound to lead to a dead and, and partly because they can be defeated by the people's astervention. Whether one should admire this display of Margait confidence or not. one must also note the extent to which Meterrand and mean French. Socialists (not all) are without to concrement with what they call 'pragmenum' and 'resham'. As for popular sacervention, it is true that there have been many strakes and demonstrations, but so far they have had little impact on the government. On foreign policy issues, the PCF has constanted startf with putting forward its own varies and it has agraphily proceed Severt descriptionest proposals, but at his refragedfrom augreenvely challenging the government, thusking (probably rightly, that this would only have the effect of molating the Community sen. Merupyur, the PC.F leadure behave that foreign policy should not be attended to terms of Matterrand's private views and wishes, but on the bean of Prance's moderating role in mearnetical affects. With regard to the office of the PCP's government pressure on an electoral fortunes, opinion polls have revealed that most Communist voters favour both the party's participation and an embedding on the workers' behalf. Fazally, the Communist leaders do not believe that perfectiontion is unprincipled unce it does not preclude criticism of the preprintable inegative ections and once, moreover, the 34th congress. had clearly commeted the party to it on the base of the only progresnive policy which is punishle in France today.

The actual case is fevour of participation put forward by the PCF is that it corresponds to the within of the party's electorate and rankand-file members, despite a few obstantions among the former and occurredal resignations among the latter; that left unity is sudapen-able in order to defeat the combined attacks of the right and the employers, attacks which have often taken the form of exceet demonstrations, which the PCF is well muted to combat became of its experience of extra purhamentary strangles, and assity, that being an the government is one of the ways of applying the party's latest stratogy, this ther words, of showing in practice that Communists have given because were a new adentity, that they do not merely repeat old forms as at rough discontent and anger but can also take part in the management of the country's affairs, at national and total levels. As to whether the 2% It was be able to keep its minusters in the government and at the same time retain its relative independence, at least until the collectioners, it section in is difficult to say because the matter does not depend in Communists alone but above alson their Socialist alaes One may venture the forecast that the PS would be very rejuctant to unless's social and political unrest by throwing the PCF out and that It would take great care not to be seen as hereing caused the break-up of left unity. It is also worth positing out that on 20 April 1984 the leader of the PS left wang, Chevenement, had thus to say about the Commussis. 'Of course, they are at times awkward partners. But their openly proclaimed motivations - concern about employment, the will to reindustrialise the country, love of progress - these are also ours.

As for left unity, it has always been achieved both against the right wing unade the Socialist party and against the Stalanist wing of the Communist party."

One final some remains in the PCF equipped to play its new role, and if no, will this help it to recover its lost ground? In the course of conversations with the suther (see Appendix 7), Pierce Juquia, a Poutbureau member, and Rouer Martella, a CC member, have admitted that many party members had not yet fully assuminted the party's new strategy, that both what has been descarded "dictatorship of the proletariat', 'Marmon-Lenguan', 'proletarian microstonalism', etc) and what has been taken on board as new pluralism, a novel approach to left unity, efficient running of nationalmed firms, etc.) have created some confusion. Juguin spoke of building the Communset Party anew. Meanwhile, as far as an outsider can judge, there is no filasor internal furmosi, most cells men to be runconably active, and membership his remained at the 700,000 level for the past five years or to. What is worrying, however, is that the party is marking time unstead of progressing and above all that there is a discrepancy between its stable membership and its dwindling electorate. It may be too early to draw defeate conclusions, but many non-Communist critics believe that the PCF is fast becoming archaic and that it has outlived whatever unefoliness and relevance it might have had in the past. I taked Pierre Juquin to comment on this opinion. In his cepty (see Appendix 7), he stressed that capitalism was in crims and that the Communist remedy – building socialism his the colours of France' – was more relevant and topical than ever. How more and to what extent a substantial number of France's people will show whather the PCF has patched the end of the couther whather it is about to enter a new era.

In lieu of a conclusion

There is an encreasing tradency among contemporary PCP wrears to country their last chapter. Pour or pay conclude: An admirable coamgir to follow to the and of this study! For a definitive conclusion about the honory of a marry which is until alove and hurbana and one proceedly he relaid upon to come up with amountains now and parameted in nother possible our statead describle. What is more profitable is to draw up a provisional balance-short and to discution some of the key problems the PCP has to face in the pressur and the future. On the debit order, one can certainly again with the noting of delay' put feeward by the party steel, but one should go further back then 1916. It is not unday to require that, from the day of its frequencing such the late (464), the PCP colleged from a cross of elegany, for the afantaty It gave that was largety modelled on the Russian Belchevik purvy. Even when it broke new ground in the 199ts, during the war and after the liberation, it command to believe that the October Revolutions constituted a universal model. Thus it was labelled to foreign party, for to long may have been eating - and at anaportage torine curtainly was lyg at was given some combinate of creditionry by its own stance. App. on the debut rade, one must mention the potentialist increasing the drawn with external appearant and travered developes and the influent to come its even part expectally. Many of these programs phasethats began to be corrected in the sort two or falcon years, but ignich commune to be done, as the enter-party controverses thew and as the fundamental manual probably admit

On the credit wide, the posserve features are in a armse the orbit wide of the costs, in if the good and the bad co-oursed aids by usie, a feet which might globbin the hunt of a Marajat distinctivity who believes in 'the foores of approachs'. For example, potwittelanding its long-standing religion on the Soviet model, the PCF has truly become a national force, and France's political fundactors is maningarishe without it. Perhaps to other Containment party has and each stress until the party of the working class' and drawn the party of the military, entered of course the two handred landacts' as that modern equivalent. Whether the PCF's parasition is genuine or marely incircal, few people would deay that it has given French commensum a distinct flavour, that of 'incubinsum' in the 1930s or that of 'incustants in the colours of France' in the 1970s. Moreover, the counterpart of the PCF's intransigence is that it has really learned to work with others, above all with the Social-democratis, and has, on the whole, refused to retire into a nelf-imposed gherio. Whatever its incitical mentales on the issue of unity, it has commissently sought unity, if only bucause it real-lead that its one chance of ever coming to power was through a conlition. Admittedly, this is a 'fact of tife', but its recognition by the PCF can be regarded as something of an achievement. Punally, it is difficult to deay that the PCF has changed, especially make its trail congress. It might be helpful to recapitulate the most againficant of these changes by comparing the party founded or Tours in 1920 with the PCF of today.

The party founded at Tours claused to be the revolutionary party of the French working class. The PCF of today makes the same class. but its understanding of 'revolution' and of 'the working class' has changed. Revolution is no longer conceived as the sangle act of taking power but as a continuous process savolving step-by-step strangles. The working class is still thought to be the one revolutionary class at modern society by variue of its role in production (creation of 'mephas value', direct exploitation, organized by the capitalist system itself), but it is no lunger made up of the old traditional pedictarial. It nowndays includes highly skilled workers and tachercons and, to addition. there are many diverse categories within it, with energic increases and outlooks. Finally (but this is a trend which tentatively began at the time of the Popular Front), the working class is not seen in the only class incremed in accretion. Hence, as we have seen, the need to discard the concept of 'the dictatorship of the proleterat' and put in its place the prospect of a socialist France ruled by the working people. i.e. by the great mesorsty of the nation.

The party founded at Tours came out to the champion of socialism. This is will the ration of love of the PCF today, but the 'nocialism in the colours of Prince' in which it believes is democratic, self-management socialism. The role of the state is not to mittate changes from an high but to reflect and commissione the changes which have been mittated from below. Moreover, 'nocialisms a la française' does not intend to do away with the private sector altogether. In a country which has taken over the main means of production, there will mill be

French Communists, is not a new various of the so-called 'mand occurrency', because it is hoped that the private sector will, in its own way, contribute to said be part of the national planted occurrency.

The party founded or Tours was a section of the Community Issuenational. The PCF of today claims to be a completely assonomous party, owing neither formal nor moral allegance to a supra-national body or to a foreign power. It no longer believes, as it did for so many years, in the leading rule of the CPSU Nor does it follow the PCI in advocating 'polycentram' and a 'third rend', believing that the former still implies that general principles can be worked out for a group of countries seemed of recognising the magnifesty of each neuralic country, and that the latter also rests on the shumon that there is a smale current read to be taken rather than a number of reads (as many as there are countries), each one dictated by the uniqueness of the concrete urastion, and yet all unued by their common endeavour to do every with the capitalist system, based on profit, exploitation and the arms race. In keeping with this approach, of which the essence is that acceptors as a universal requirement, not in agite of the diversity which prevails, but became it is everywhere the only abstractive in endies account cross, unemployment and poverty, the PCF takes the view that a similar of countries have already standaged to start the building of a new occulant society. These include the fourteen or fifteen countries raied by 'Marzast-Lemons' parties and also the countries of Africa and Asia which have chosen "the non-capitalist path". Each of these construes has followed an own read to socialism. None as free from hundations, therecomings and problems. But, according to the PCP, they have taken the first, independable, step in the right direction, and together, they constitute a great force for posce. Because of this, they deserve the PCF's aupport. Not the 'unconditional support' which was given to the Sovjet Union in the past, but a support stemming from a community of sime, and furthermore, a support which does not preclude constructive criticisms. According to the PCF of today, the societies construe must be seen for what they really are, s.e. another the embodiment of all that as good nor a creation of the devil, so asserted by Rassian.

The party founded at Tours uncompromisingly declared that it was a party of struggle. The PCF of today continues to believe that an uncal advance is possible without personent struggles, which it same to lead and to on-ordinate. But it also describes swelf as a 'party of government' This is not a transment phrase, reflecting the presence of Communit ministers in the French government more June 1981, for in fact it was launched well before the left's electoral victory. At the 1979-23rd congrues the political secolution stated.

As a purty of struggle, we want and strive over bottom to become a purty of government. We are god shall always be ready to assume our responsibilities in the agreese of the working people at all levels, including government level. We are all the story determined to take part to the remains of Prance since the working people will not, without our paracipation, achieve the changes which they need.

The view that the PCF is both a purry of struggle and a party of powerament is not enturely new, since it was first out forward at the tune of the first Commission governmental participation, in 1444-7. But Comanform pressure made the IPC F drop the phrase and the concept for a while. It is being loudly revived today in order to stress that the presence of Communist measurers is not a substitute for popular struggles but as escent to supplement these struggles. It is a logical consequence of the notion that revolution is a process. Another terreficial contourence is that the PCF is no longer afreed of the stages of 'class collaboration' of st cuters a non-revolutionary government. The very idea of a rigid distinction between a revolutionary and a non-revolutionary government has been discarded as it is considered. to be no longer applicable today. A left-wing government, even if it is, like the present one, dominated by the 'reformat' Socialist party, can, much the help of popular processes, take stops which beans to challenge capitalism. For the pencile's own strongles were and remain the persentant of the PCP's political mend. This explains its arterade towards the present government. It has so far refused to leave it, even when it has taken measures which the party has openly and sharply enticated (such to the 'mayor plan' of 1983), on the ground that the direction of the soverment's policy will, in the lone run, be decided, not in the cubiner chamber, but by the people themselves. Given the latter's present level of understanding and militancy, the PCF believes that it is at a better position to influence events from the inside rather than from a position of splendad molation.

The purty founded at Tours was a party based on Marxivit, and it soon followed the Stalant practice of describing its theory as 'Marxim-Luminum'. The PCF of today prefers to call strolf a party based on 'accentric socialism', as it no longer shares Stalan's view that Marxims as a complete doctrinal whole, made up of fixed universal.

have seen, at not attended to play down the apparamet of Marx and Lanan last extended to play down the apparamet of Marx and Lanan last extend to exceed that their theory (which they themselves describe not as a 'dogma' but as 'a guide to action') in not completed but has to face ever new problems and work out ever new infutions to thom. This is what Marx, Engels and Laura intended, it is claimed by the PCF. At the international colloquism argament by the LRM as Puris in January 1963, Lucien Sève called for a new amentific norminus, characterised by a stress on experimentation (an opposed to dogmatic americant having the force of lows), on living dislection, as approved to the Stalanet conception of 'dislectice' which reduced the latter to a set of getteral principles, valid in the field of exture as well as in the field of notal amendate), and on seventieration is opposed to the 'utopian' being that the last word having bear and by the 'classics', all one has to do it to apply these 'tenchings') ?

The party founded at Tours accepted the thirteenth Counstern condition that it should be based on 'democratic contradiens' (emphase as the argumal), Which was described as an organizational principle according to which 'iron discipling bordering on military dramplems' should prevail 'as the present especk of scare civil was.' The PCF of tuday stall believes to democratic contribute, but if it had to emphasis one of the two terms, it is the first rather than the second. that it would stress. All the changes in party rules since 1936, includme the latest 1979 revenue, have endorwaged to designative that party structure, allowers as particular for a counderable extension of toner-party ductionen. Exputitions accompanied by character assaumation are now a thing of the past. Moreover, the continued rejection. of "factions" is presented as gramateeing more democracy, not loss, on the ground that saturnal debates are from and into unbalanted when defferent variously are not continuousland in the shape of various contending groups.

The party founded at Tours was aware that at was making history, but as at grew and developed at adopted the Stalanus practice of treating its own past as secred limitory, in other words, of replicing history with apolicipation. The PCP of raday as langue treats party history as a tabou subsect. Even when it feels the need to protest regordarly against what it calls "the distortions" of non-Communist historium (and it must be adopted that in this field there are still too many cases of political buss), it does not react by storically but asswers its critics in a coin, resourced manner. More emportantly, party historium are paramegad to pursue their research without directives from the crosser, and often they have test bure the errors and the electronistical factors leaders with increased, brong frankness. Such a critical approach to the past is not confused to betterois and intellectuals, it the agith congress, it was the General Societary largest who spale of the research feet years' dries which married the party a recent horizon. And his remarks were ambushed in the congress final Research. Soff criticisms of this hand is rore enough to any political party, that executily, it was represently rare as a Cammounti party.

The party founded at Tours could count - or thought it could count - on the revolutionary anthonorm of the manes, and it was confidencie behaved that 'the law fight, was about to larger, leading to the tions-co-strait mallerman. The Pt. F of today harves that it is bytte in a time ervelopments attaction and that it has to deal with a new working. claim and with new social structs. The beginner problem which finge it is the said to show its 'topic slave', a good retreases to the modern world, and disput the behal that it is a refer of a beginne era. The problem is tectotogical putercai and organisamenal Socialogically, it has to find a common increase with the many was proleturals tootal groups trhans support a meet near of seeing a indiscussible. This is get a quantum of arrang them to become party encoders or Continuant. venues, but of making them shod their propictors and their hostsley, so that they are prepared to allow the PC P to play a rule in the nation is nebrical life. Petrocally, the problem is to find the forms of unity. which really work and to bucome truly pieraloxic, in deads as well in in words. The political problem is complicated by the fact that there m, and will commune to be for some time, a reference as well as a revolutionary trend among the Prench working closs. Pinceful coextension, which does not provide but presupposes converse, firm datasis, is the enty encour. Organizationally, the Pt. P has every right to ottack to an oter; pean, using if a betaven that they are been, but at most constantly adopt them if it wants to bucome a man party". Democrathe contrained, was increased by Lorent for a party of professional 1996torrownerse. It may still be word for a modern revolutionary party, but it man be made to not medica condition, with a greater street on dimensionly and burns the limit amountain of the changes to be autroduced.

The PCF is changing. Here deep-wood, buting and pressure the changes well prove to be up do not bear. Norther do we have whether they will help the party to arrest and reverse the deckar of m influence. Only the future will tell. Qui viora verra. However, if one may puraphrase the poet Mallarmé, one may say that, irrespective of past, present and future changes, the PCF will probably remain Tel qu'en hei-même enfin ses melitants le changeut (Such as its own members change it into itself).

payment of dues

(Article t)

Article t adds that 'adherence to materialism is not a condition of member-ship'. Article its states that the cell must 'create the best conditions for members' part tapetion in the party's activity'

2. Banic organisational principle:

"Democratic centralism" This involves

(a) discussion at all levels, but majority decisions binding on all.

- (b) election of all leading bodies and 'collective seadership' at all levels.
- (c) all leading bodies accountable to the membership.

(d) decisions of higher bodies binding on lower bodies.

(e) 'Criticism and self-criticism' at all levels (note: in the Communist vocabulary, 'self-criticism' is not a public individual 'confession', but a critical review of activity by the party itself or one of its units).

(f) Absence of 'factions', i.e. organised groups within the party (note: according to the PCF, factions lead to internecine strife, impair the party's effectiveness, and are a 'conceture of democracy' since they allow minorities to flout majority decisions).

Note For the first time, the 1979 Rules describe laternal discussion in some detail. Article 7 provides for three types of discussion: (i) within each party tion; (ii) within all advisory committees; (iii) in the party press, 'obligatorily before all congresses and whenever the CC launches a discussion'.

3. Party members' responsibilities

(a) Duties (Article to): attend meetings, read the party press, improve theoretical knowledge, defend working people a interests, be active in trade unions and other associative bodies, loyalty to other party members, and defence of the party against the 'class enemy'.

(b) Rights Article II): vote on decisions, elect members and stand for election to leading bodies, refer matters to higher bodies, criticism of any party member or unit, be informed of my remark or criticism concerning them.

(c) Article 52 describes party discipline as 'freely consented' and mys that all party members are contract to keep dimentizant views, provided they do not jeopardise 'the common implementation of majority decisions'.

(d) Breaches of discipline may lead to reactions, including expulsion.

4. Party structure

(a) The basic party unit is the cell. (The word is meant to stress that party units are living bodies rather than groups of people who meet casually.) In 1979, there were 38,000 cells. There are three types of cell – workplace, randomial and rural cells.

(b) The cells of a given area belong to a section and elect a comité de section. In 1979, there were 3,000 sections.

(c) The sections of a given dipartement belong to a Piddration (district) and elect a commit feddral. In 1979, there were 98 fiddrations.

5. National bodies

(a) The autional congress, convened every three years, is 'the Party's supreme authority.' (Article 37)

(b) The party's executive is known as the Central Committee, and a elected by the canonal congress. In 1979, it included 245 members. The CC elects a Polyical Bureau and a secretarian.

(c) The CC may convene a paragral conference whose decisions apply to the whole party. (Article 44)

(d) The CC may also convene the party national council, which is a consultative body. (Article 46)

6. Elections to leading bodies

(a) Candidates may be put forward by leading bodies, any party unit, or any party member.

(b) A special committee draws up a 'recommended list', but delegates are free to reject it. (Article 50)

(c) All elections are by secret ballot.

7. Communist Youth

The Communist Youth organisation, Montement de la Jennesse Communiste, MJC, is organisationally independent of the PCF, but the party is expected to give it 'pointed and ideological support'. The MJC is divided into the Jennesse Communistes (JC), open to young people at school or at work, and the Union der Bradiants Communistes (UEC) which is open to students. At the end of June 1976, the MJC had about 90,000 members.

8. M Ps and Councillors (les élas)

(a) M.Ps and councillors have 'the same rights and duties as other Party members' (Article §2) They are subject to party control.

(b) Their salation are paid into the party and 'the CC decides on their use'. (This is intended as a seferiment against correction.)

4. The party's means of expression

(a) L'Humanuté is the party's 'central organ'. All members are expected to read it and distribute it. (Article 57)

(b) Every cell is expected to publish and distribute a cell newspaper. (Article 50)

10. Party finances

The PCF's income is derived from 'dues, subscriptions, a proportion of MPs' and councillors' mission, and party firms' (Article 59)

Note: The 'party firms' (entroprises du Parts) are mostly publishing and princing firms.

Appendix 2: The PCF's social composition and implantation

Membership

(a) The PCF is a prodominantly working-class party (unlike the PS) and a majority of its leaders are of working-class origin (unlike the PCI's). But it also includes members of the middle strata, the peasantry and the intelligentum. The latest complete party census of 1966 gave the following figures:

		76
Workers	60	3.1
Employees	rê	75
Intellectuals	5	0
Transaction 1	6	5. 56
Self-employed	5	77
The 1979 partial census gave the following	g figures:	%
Workers & employees	270,000	51
Intellectuals	70,000	13.5
Unemployed	23,000
Immigrant workers	25,000
Small farmers	17,000
Craftemen & tradespeople	20,000
Students & school students	12,000
Old age pensioners	90,000
People not gainfully employed
(capecially women)	62,000

(b) The PCF includes a higher proportion of women than any other French party. In 1959, they made up 22 per cent of the whole membership; in 1966, 25 5 per cent (90,000), and in 1979, 35.7 per cent (250,000).

(c) In terms of age, the percentage of people under twenty-five was 9-4 percent in 1966 and 11-8 per cent in 1979. The percentage of people in the 26-40 age group was 33 per cent in 1966 and 39 per cent in 1979. In 1966, 17-3 percent were over sixty

Social implantation

(a) In the post-war period (up to 1981), the PCF's strongest electoral support has come from the industrial morth and the rural centre, in the Mediterranean south, the PCF and the PS have commanded roughly the same support About 50 per cent of PCF voters are working-class (about one-third for the PS)

(b) From the Liberation onwards, the PCF has had members in all departaments. It is strongest in the industrial north, the northern and western areas of the Massif Central, and the Provence and Rhone valley area.

(2) Ellementein explains that not all cards sent by the CC to the various districts are actually taken up. He adds that the figures in both columns from 1961 powards were communicated to him by the party's Organisation Department.

(3) In that year the parry claimed to have issued one million cards.

1978	5.8	20.6	86
1981	4.0	16.1	44

The above table calls for the following general comments:

(a) In the pre-war period, the year 1936 represents a turning point for the PCF, which becomes a agnificant parlamentary force for the first time.

(b) Under the Fourth Republic, the PCF becomes the largest single party and gets at least one quarter of the votes cost.

(c) Under the Fifth Republic, the PCF recovers slowly (with the exception of 1968) and gets at least one fifth of the votes cast (with the exception of 1958) until 1981. In the 1981 General Election, the party gets its lowest post-war score, but this has to be seen in relation to the presidential election setback. The presidential election of 1969 showed a result of 4,781,838 votes cast, i.e. 21.52 per cent of votes cast. In the 1981 presidential election, the PCF received 4,446,922 votes, only 15.34 per cent of the votes cast.

Appendix 7: Interviews with three PCF leaders (April 1984) (Brief summary)

Igearview with Pierre Jugain, member of the Polithereau

How do you arrasage the PCF's future?

We have adopted a new strategy and now our great historic task is to build the Communist party mew so that it can fully apply the new strategy. This is the long-term recovery we enviange, and it might take twenty to twenty-live years to achieve.

What about the immediane present?

At the moment, the left no longer empty unjority support in the cuuntry. The trend can be reversed and this is what we are fighting for

What is the present state of the purty, numerically and advelopically? Our membership and influence are extronery. We are needed declining dramatically nor advancing feet enough. On the whole, purty members support the leadership, but there is bound to be some confusion, partly because most Commission were transparated by the 1977 and 1981 events, with the result that they are not sufficiently on the affensive, and partly because the party has changed in much in the part six years that the novelty has not yet been fully assistableted.

Has the PCP become archaic, as some people assert?

Our revolutionary party would become archaic only if the revolutionary schizion cannot to be the only way out of the capitaism crisis. On the other hand, we would deserve to be labelled archaec if we muck exchangely to the working class and amoraed its allow in the struggle for socialism.

Why does the PCP trant to stay or the government? What's so it for you? If you put it like this, I would my that the immediate advantage is all. But from the long-time point of view, our puricipation legitimates out new pursuity is that it shows that Communists are capable of managing the country's affairs. Our government presence is not increased but stretting.

Will the PCF continue to enmesse what it regards as the negative aspects of the generalism policy?

Of months

But if you intend to go an criticizing, why did you give the government a tota of confidence?

We expressed our confidence in its general policy and nine.

So, when do you make of Manney's statement that he will not shift his ground on the steel plan?

At this stage, Juquin give a bread made and mid:

We shak one. Whitever Mauroy may my, the government's start pion is not smiletic and will have to be revised through augustustants. The people's incorvences will be decisive.

What about fareign policy?

Objectively, the government's foreign policy is on the whole committeet with the pranciples lead down in the June 1981 FCF-PS declaration. As for making a big same of the aspects with which we dangere, my on the question of the manifes, it would only strengthen the right-wing trend in the FS and might lead to our exchange. If this happened, we would get little sympathy, especially as there is no mass peace movement in our country.

Interview with Francotte Lexard, member of the Polithurean

As you are in charge of party aducation, how do you see your task?

We try to provide our members with an understanding of the contemporary period. The three main topics are the historic agnificance of the period, the world today, and the Communist project today. The latter can be summed up in the will to change French accusty in the direction of democratic seculium.

Do you agree with the view that the 13 April demonstration was a failure?

No, I do not It represented the beginning of a great popular survement. We've not had anything like at for a long time.

Would you agree with Garryuy that districts should not send homogeneous delegations to the party congress?

Our leadership is certainly not against Garipuy's suggestion.

Do you think that the PCF fully approciates and supports the momen's struggle for amancipation?

Yes. As a woman, I feel quite at home in the parry. Moreover, our party links the issue of women's liberation with broad social seven, such as jobs-

Would you say that the PCF is archate?

No. We have an original solution to get the country out of the crisis. Moreover, when we reject the criterion of financial profitability, we do not do so in the mane of obsolete dogma, but in the name of efficiency. The criterion of growth which we propose metend is truly modern because it corresponds to the present stage of our economy.

Interview with Roger Martelli, historian and member of the C.C.

What to the present ideological state of the party?

Good on the whole, but there is a certain amount of frustration due to the magnitude of what has yet to be done and in the gap between the party's proposed substiess and public opinion. Add to this the fact that our manhars are sall trying to grapple with the new ideas branched by our latest congresses.

What, to your turn, is the PCP's mean test index!

It send strive to become a creabile force so that grouple would limb upon it as a 'under purty'. In order to achieve this, the PCF must be at the same transitive party which best understands medians resistes and the party of social change. The two go hand in hand.

How do you pastify the PCPs continued government participation? We joined the government in order to implement the painters had down by Socialists and Communists in June 1981. Our continued presence is one of the ways of putting pressure on the PS to make it carry out at 1981 plodges. Although a repetition of 1967 is not entirely ruled out, I think the PS would prefer to keep the Constitutions in the government because it believes that this is how it can best occurs its min of marginalising our party.

I assume that you yourselves do not must to be marginalised, but rather believe that share are greater opportunities for your party and the morking people in post-1081 France. What are they?

What we can achieve at governmental and parliamentary level to rather limited. But we can company among the people to urge them to make full one of such intercrued reforms as democratisation, decempendentian and exceeded nationalization. With regard to the latter, our work in automalizate forms on yield againsticant results, because it greaters a case by case intentips to introduce new criteria of management. I very case by case because we main my construct nationalized firms with the state; each one of them enjoys a good deal of automatry.

Should you not be more critical of the negative expects of the government's foreign policy?

We must evoid at all costs the formation of a de facto alliance between the PS and the right on foveign policy nouse and the resurrection of the myth that we are a 'foreign party'.

As a historian who has made a special study of the 1956 counts, what do you thoub of the PGP's reaction to the CPSU 20th congress?

I do not quite agree with what you my in your book? when you write that Thorax endorsed the public superts of the congress. I believe that, unlike Toglasts, he failed to suggest the exploration of entirely new paths. To him, the noth congress simply streat the resourcest of old concepts which the movement had descreted during the cold war. It was more a question of going back to 1936 and 1946 then of branching out in a really nevel direction.

Notes

- J. Cf. Ch. 9, p. 265.
- 2. Cf. Ch. 8, p. 230. I think that Roger Martelli is right when he says that Therez – and the PCF leadership as a whole – falled to work out a new strategy in 1956, but all the same, there was some nevelty in his approach, especially on the usue of the peaceful transition to socialism; the latter had only been impised in Thorez's 1946 Times interview.
